Not So Different

YEAR'S end and the dawning of 1939 have found American industries, including the motion picture, searching themselves for plans, hopes, indications of where-do-we-go-from-here—and uniformly arriving with exceeding unanimity at the slightly fuzzy answer: "It'll be different."

The extreme probability, based on our observations for several thousand years, is that there will not be as much difference as is expected. The indications are that on the big stage of Time the cast changes, the props are repainted, but the story is about the same. New Deals have nearly always meant really new faces in old spots.

There are, then, many indications that presently there will be new names of importance in the rosters of the motion picture, probably some new corporations and a good many realignments. Meanwhile the business of making, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures will continue. The same audiences will continue to be entertained in about the same manner by very much the same material.

The exaggerated impression of exciting change comes from the fact that it is the change or suggestion of it that makes stories, news copy, publicity.

A SAMPLING of the state of the nation with respect to the standing of the motion picture has just been completed by the Ladies' Home Journal of Philadelphia, which says it has used "the scientifically accurate method which forecast the 1936 presidential election," in a "What the Women of America Think About Entertainment." The findings seem to summarize thus:

¶ The women's vote on the best picture of 1938 was: "Snow White"—9 per cent; "Robin Hood"—7 per cent; "The Good Earth"—6 per cent; "In Old Chicago"—6 per cent; "Test Pilot"—4 per cent; "Zola"—4 per cent; "Captains Courageous"—4 per cent; "Lost Horizon"—3 per cent; "Three Comrades"—3 per cent; "Girl of the Golden West"—2 per cent; "Hurricane"—2 per cent; "The Awful Truth"—2 per cent; a miscellany of all others—48 per cent.

¶ Fifty-seven per cent of the women said there was no objection to having advertising of products shown on the screen.

The survey discovered that generally women were divided evenly as to whether or not the screen should show women drinking and smoking. The farm and small town women were the most disapproving and more objected to drinking than to smoking. Most women thought children under fourteen should be permitted to see only selected pictures, and 69 percent were of the opinion that one picture a week was enough for the youngsters.

That sounds very much like what might be expected of the voice of America, interested in decent entertainment, and within that requirement enjoying a considerable diversity of tastes.

Incidentally examination of the list of most approved pictures indicates that the more mature women are considerably less star-dazzled than their off-spring and the majority, and, it appears that none of the so-cute juveniles so highly rated at the box office especially charmed the mothers of America. The mammas did display an appetite for strenuous stories and he-man product.

THE Wall Street Journal, ever with a dollar eye on industry, thinks that "the movies probably will have a much more profitable year in 1939 than in 1938, which might have been called a year of expiation." That is from the pen of Mr. Sydney B. Self, our Connecticut neighbor who gets more of his impressions of the pictures from the ticker, banks and SEC reports than from us.

Mr. Self makes no promise of an ending of the "expiation" with the ending of the year, however, since: "It begins to look as though a lengthy process of revamping and readjustment of policies and methods of doing business is just beginning to get underway."

One may judge from Mr. Self's reflection of Wall street opinion that there is a strong impression downtown that the theatre department has been doing a much better job than the production department out west, on the whole. That just might be related to the fact that Paramount recently sent Mr. Frank Freeman to Hollywood.

"The high, wide and handsome days are coming to a close," says the Journal, "and . . . henceforth there will be increasing control and regulation."

EDITOR & PUBLISHER, organ of the newspaper industry, is plumb delighted with the movies, what with the considerable spending on institutional copy and "the quiz." It sees a great future for a big advertiser. "America's supremacy in this field . . . as in so many other fields, is the result of that most logical of American partnerships—Genius and Newspaper Advertising. For the last fifteen years, by stepping up newspaper advertising appropriations to the present figure of some $55,000,000 a year, the producers and exhibitors of motion pictures have more than doubled theatre attendance and increased revenue from $400,000,000 to $1,000,000,000," says Editor & Publisher impartially.

That is of intimate interest to your editor, who laboured some years to get newspapers to be aware of motion pictures. The first publicity attention for the motion picture as an entertainment institution to appear in the New York Times, for instance, was in the solid agate of a "dramatic jottings" department edited, or copy-read, by Mr. Brock Pemberton, who used to print something "because we are both from Kansas."

The movement has made progress—with two hundred-and-odd, especially the odd, correspondents in Hollywood, but the selling effort goes on. The same issue of Editor & Publisher carries a page of display advertising signed by Mr. Howard

Stock Deals

Twenty-one officers, directors and large stockholders of motion picture companies had dealings in the stocks of their corporations in the first eleven months of 1938, a compilation of reports made to the United States Securities and Exchange Commission shows. In almost all instances the list disclosed that the officers' trading activities concerned increasing their equity in their companies or in disposing of heavy holdings gradually and without disturbing the market. Under the federal acts administered by the SEC, officers, directors and large stockholders are required to report all dealings in the equity stocks of their companies.

An estimated $2,730,000 was spent for 546 feature stories during 1938, compared with the 648 purchases, costing about $3,240,000 in 1937, and the 892 acquisitions costing $4,505,000 in 1936.

Details of the year's purchases are on page 25.

NOT SO DIFFERENT

Dietz and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, suggesting to editors and publishers that publicity men "are desirous of serving the press in a way consistent with legitimate journalism." It's "in writing."

From Washington, among the year's end messages, came one from Mr. Thurman Arnold, assistant attorney general, who by reason of certain developments, not to say movements, has become a "name" in the news of the film industry. Mr. Arnold spoke, as before, not so much in the terms of a law enforcement official as a proclaimer of policies and laws to come. Getting positively administrative with the matters of conduct of business, he talked of prices and price reductions, along with marketing practices. He included the observation that: "A program which may be sound for, let us say, motion pictures may be useless or positively harmful for steel."

We are not exactly spoofing Mr. Arnold when we remark that we have heard quite a bit now and then about block booking and blind buying in structural steel. It is said to have been a problem for the builders.

INFORMATION, PLEASE!

IN sequel to editorial expressions presented in Motion Picture Herald have come certain criticisms of what has been deemed the attitude of this publication toward "Films for Democracy", which some contend is a constructive, patriotic movement for the preservation of the traditional democracy of the United States of America.

Motion Picture Herald therefore considers it appropriate to ask "Films for Democracy" clearly, officially and publicly to declare its position with respect to:

1—The political theories commonly known as Communism.

2—The political theories commonly known as Fascism.

3—The political theories characteristic of both Communism and Fascism, and commonly described as Totalitarianism, under which the state reserves to itself complete rights over the life, liberty and pursuits of the individual, denying to the individual those rights held under the traditional American system as a natural and inalienable heritage.

Defend Quiz Contest

Attorneys for the large motion picture companies and the Motion Pictures' Greatest Year this week prepared to defend their clients against a suit filed in New York City federal court by Milton Spitz, a nonpracticing attorney connected with a New York realty firm, who charges that in their promotion and use of the "Movie Quiz" contest the defendants infringed on his copyright of a game patented by him and associates in 1936, called "U-Spot-It." Mr. Spitz asks an accounting of all the profits derived from the game, their surrender, the impounding of the booklets, stoppage of the contest (albeit a bit late), damages, costs, and many other things.

Last minute replies in the Quiz Contest, mailed just before the deadline at midnight December 31st flooded headquarters in New York with an estimated million envelopes early this week. Extra room was required.

The story of the suit and pictures of the mail-flooded contest headquarters are on page 18.

Protest Paris Tax

In protest against a new municipal tax which they estimate would take 44 out of every 100 francs received at the box office, Parisian exhibitors went on "strike" Wednesday by closing their 350 houses, which employ about 25,000 persons. The tax, voted by the Paris City Council on December 31, would cost Paris exhibitors about $700,000 yearly, they estimate. They are supported in their protest by distributors, producers, and by their suburban "brethren" who have promised to close their houses also, if the Paris theatre owners do not obtain satisfaction in one week. Provincial exhibitors are expected to do likewise in two weeks, if the tax is not repealed.

Allied Will Speak

Allied's attitude toward the trade practice proposals will be made known at the annual directors' meeting in Washington January 17th and 18th. Allied directors will vote on the proposals.

Meeting in advance of the board will be Allied's negotiating committee.

Election of officers and selection of the time and place of the next national convention are also on the agenda. W. A. Steffes and Northwest Allied are campaigning for the next convention for Minneapolis. The Indiana unit has a bid in for Indianapolis, and New Jersey Allied has entered Atlantic City.

Allied's "Founder's Day" dinner will be held January 17th at the Carlton Hotel, the meeting headquarters, signalizing the 10th anniversary of the organization. Surviving founders are Mr. Steffes, H. M. Richey, James C. Ritter, H. A. Cole, B. D. Cockrill and Herman Blum.

Held Unconstitutional

Declared unconstitutional this week was Wisconsin's three-year-old preferred playdate law, which never had been enforced by the state due to a temporary injunction obtained shortly after the bill's passage in 1935. A Federal statutory court in Milwaukee has now nullified the bill completely. Plaintiffs were Universal, RKO, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, United Artists, Vitagraph and Twentieth Century-Fox.

Salaries

James Cagney received $234,000 from Warner Brothers in the fiscal year ending August 27, 1938; Kay Francis got $224,000, and Hal Wallis, production executive, was paid $236,666.67, according to the company's annual report to the Securities and Exchange Commission, released Wednesday.

Gibraltar

The organized American film industry definitely will maintain a solid front against the Mussolinian decree establishing a governmental distribution monopoly of all films as of last Saturday. Accordingly the eight majors will cease doing business in Italy. This was decided Wednesday afternoon by the board of directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America at a meeting in New York to which they had called foreign managers for a long discussion of the new law and its possible effects on the business of American distributors.

The decision "to stick together and get out of the country," as a Hays organization spokesman explained it, settled speculation over whether RKO, Columbia, United Artists and Universal would continue operations in Italy because of their existing distribution contracts with the Italian distributors. The prevailing legal opinion is that those contracts were invalidated by the decree. Further analysis will be made within a few days at continuing meetings. Italy at the eleventh hour had given a six-months' exemption to the four aforementioned companies. This was considered a move to break the "solid front" of the eight major companies and thus avoid a "film famine." The four other American distributing companies withdrew December 31st.

Product Talks

Mid-seasonal product talks are on in Hollywood, with home office executives arriving daily to confer with studio chiefs on the balance of this season's programs and to hold first talks on what might be expected for next season.

Nicholas M. Schenck, president, and William F. Rodgers, general sales manager of Loew's, arrived at the Culver City studio Tuesday from Broadway for one week's product conversations.

Nate J. Blumberg, president, and W. A. Scully, general sales manager of Universal, leave New York for Universal City shortly.

Maurice Silverstone, operating head of United Artists, leaves for the coast Friday for the dual purpose of attending the company's annual stockholders meeting and then to look into product matters. Alexander Korda, of London Films, U. A. partner, also is on the scene.

Gradwell L. Sears, general sales manager, will lead a home office delegation of Warner officials from New York to Burbank on January 14th. Accompanying him will be Sam E. Morris, foreign sales head; Carl Lesserman, assistant general sales manager; Mort Blumenstock, in charge of advertising-publicity in the east, and S. S. Schneider.

W. Ray Johnston, Monogram president, flew to the coast over the weekend to confer with Scott Dunlap on 1939-'40 product.

Robert T. Kane, head of Twentieth Century-Fox production in England, was another westward traveler during the week.

"Americanism"

RKO Pathe this week joined the move toward the treatment of "Americanism" in films, the company's newsreel announcing the production of a feature on the topic. It will be the first feature to be made by Pathe News, and, according to Ned E. Depinet, president, will serve to combat the "fear engendered by the unsettled state of the world." With the past 20 years as background, they plan to show the trend toward the future security of America.

Pathe News staff writers now are on the script. It will be called "United We Stand." For release about February 15th.

Warners, which have been unusually active on patriotic subjects, decided this week to have all future historical short subjects released under the Warner banner instead of Vitaphone, which brand is marked on all company shorts. Behind the move is a desire to have the public identify the subjects directly with the house of Warner.

Warners this week agreed to make available to all exhibitors the short "Star Spangled Banner" film which it is now playing in its theatres.

The Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio has commended Warners for its historical short subjects.

Pettijohn Praises Pact

C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, sees the first draft of the distributors' proposals for an industry trade practice program as "the greatest forward stride ever taken" by exhibition and distribution. Expressing the opinion that the submission of the draft has not closed the door to further negotiations or efforts at clarification of the first proposals, Mr. Pettijohn praised the negotiators' sincerity.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America's committee will meet in New York Monday on the trade reform proposals, conferring the next day with Sidney Kent on changes which the MPTOA deems to be desirable.

Inauguration

James Roosevelt, son of the President, and formerly his secretary, officially started his motion picture career on Tuesday morning in the New York offices of Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., as vice-president, with no definite duties announced. Between conferences with United Artists executives, attendance at a meeting of that company's board of directors in the afternoon, and examination of his mail, Mr. Roosevelt found time to receive the press. Said he, among other things:

"This is my first day, and I'm going to make very few statements about this business until I know something about it."

HOLIDAY BUSINESS THROUGHOUT U.S. FOUND 10 PER CENT OFF '37 PERIOD

Marked Advance in New York, Omaha, Philadelphia, Seattle; Buffalo Theatres Break Even, Comparison of Receipts Shows

The Christmas-New Year's week theatre business this year showed a decline from the heavy intake enjoyed by many houses during the holidays of last year. 121 "key" theatres in 20 large cities last week grossed $1,367,894, as against the $1,527,459 gross of the 125 "key" theatres operating in the same places one year ago. The drop was equal to about ten per cent.

On the basis of a per theatre average of $11,305, had 125 houses in the territory covered been operating this year, last week's holiday grosses presumably would have reached $1,413,114, or $114,345 less than the income of the 125 theatres reporting one year ago.

Per theatre holiday averages show: $12,219 for 1937, $11,305 for 1938.

Comparisons Shown

Holiday business this year showed marked improvement over last year in New York, Omaha, Philadelphia and Seattle, broke about even in Buffalo, with the remaining 15 cities dividing this year's losses between them, some losing only slightly, others more pronouncedly, as the following comparative compilation will show:

Samuelson Business Manager Of New Allied Unit

Sidney E. Samuelson, former national president of Allied States, has been given a contract as business manager of the newly formed Allied Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Inc. Mr. Samuelson has been active in exhibitor ranks since he organized the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey in 1920, which, 11 years later, became Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey, which he headed. Operating the Newton, in Newton, New Jersey, Mr. Samuelson is a director of Allied of New Jersey, a member of National Allied's trade practice negotiating committee and of Allied's executive committee.

David W. Yaffe, attorney, has been appointed assistant business manager, and Walter Woodward, regional sales director for Altec, has been named general field representative.

Dollinger Resigns as New Jersey Allied Head

Giving "pressure of personal business" as the reason, Irving Dollinger on Wednesday stepped down as president of the Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey. The organization's board of directors unanimously elected George Gold, of the Rivoli, Newark, to fill out Mr. Dollinger's unexpired term as president. They also elected Harry Kridel, of the Mayfair theatre, Newark, to replace Mr. Gold in the vice-presidency. Mr. Dollinger succeeds Mr. Kridel on the board of directors.

Frank Walker Named Victor Record Manager

G. K. Throckmorton, president of the RCA Manufacturing Company, has announced the appointment of Frank Walker as manager of the Victor and Bluebird Record Department, in addition to his duties as manager of RCA Victor's broadcast transcription activities.

Mr. Walker's experience in the recording field began in 1919. In 1924, he was made general manager and director of the Columbia Phonograph Company, joining the RCA Victor organization to organize the company's electrical transcription business.

U.S. Court Decides One Film Appeal, Rejects Another

Motion pictures were prominent in the activities of the U. S. supreme court this week, with one appeal decided, a second rejected and a third heard.

In the case decided, Associate Justice Harlan Stone delivered the opinion of the court, that the West Virginia gross receipts tax was not applicable to motion picture distributors with no offices within the state. The opinion affirmed a decision of the U. S. district court for the southern district of West Virginia that United Artists Corporation, which, for the majors, was challenging constitutionality of the tax, was engaged only in interstate commerce and was, accordingly, beyond the power of the state to tax.

Pointing out that United Artists, while making contracts with West Virginia exhibitors, executes those contracts at its New York office, ships films to exhibitors from outside the state and requires payments on contracts to be made to exchanges in other states, Justice Stone held that the company was not engaged in business in West Virginia and was therefore not subject to taxation. At the same time, he emphasized, the money earned by the company in West Virginia does not escape taxation, since the exhibitor is required to pay the tax on his gross receipts, including that part due United Artists.

Rejecting a petition by General Talking Pictures Corporation for a second review of the case in which it twice has been held to have infringed patents by the use, in talking picture equipment, of amplifiers and tubes licensed only for radio reception, the court finally wrote "finis" to one of the most bitterly contested cases in several years and one which may even yet become the focal point for a Department of Justice drive for revision of the patent laws. In both of the opinions it has rendered, the court majority—Associate Justice Hugo L. Black dissenting—has held the company guilty of infringement.

Right of the distributors to dictate the practices of exhibitors as to double billing and admissions will be decided in a few days, the court this week having heard argument in the socalled Dallas anti-trust case against majors.

Instituted by the Government with the major distributors and two theatre circuits, Interstate and Texas Consolidated Theatres, as defendants, the suit involves license agreements between the distributors and circuits, which the Department of Justice alleged were in violation of the Sherman Act. The district court gave the Government the verdict, holding that the contracts were violative of the anti-trust act by reason of the inclusion therein of provisions that no feature film first-run by the circuits would be permitted to be used in double bills in second or subsequent run houses and that the latter would be required to charge an admission of not less than 25 cents when showing films originally shown by the circuits first-run at 40 cents or more.

The appeal of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers from the federal statutory court ruling dismissing the society's attack on an anti-ASCAP law enacted by the State of Washington was filed in the U. S. supreme court Tuesday. Appeal, together with that involving a Florida law, is scheduled for argument January 9.

MOST U. S. COMPANIES SETTING PLANS FOR FEATURES FOR LATIN COUNTRIES

United Artists Leads, and Plans Three More Spanish Language Films; Paramount and Twentieth Century-Fox Active

In line with the apparently growing conviction of many leading film executives that the motion picture industry in the United States has an opportunity to make up in South America for the markets lost of late in Europe, plans are underway for intense cultivation of the Latin American countries, with practically every large company participating in production started, outlined, or considered.

United Artists now is in the lead. The company has been releasing Spanish language pictures for the last five years, through production facilities in Spain and Mexico, and Murray Silverstone, chief executive, in the face of the industry's repeated rebuffs by the European authoritarian states, is giving increased attention to the southern field. This week came the announcement that three Spanish language pictures are to be made for the company by Fortunio Bonanova, Spanish actor and producer, one of the pictures to be produced in Hollywood, the others in Mexico.

Mr. Nova appeared in one of the first United Artists Spanish releases, several years ago, entitled "Caballero Poderoso," and since has appeared in Hollywood English and Spanish language productions, his latest being "Romance in the Dark," a Paramount release. His first picture for UA will be based upon a Mexican best seller, and he will star in it.

The picture will be ready for release in March, and Mr. Nova is to begin work in Mexico city soon, with a Mexican cast.

Others Made in Spain

UA's other Spanish language films released in the last five years have been "Una Semana de Felicidad" and "Dona Francisquista," both of which, in addition to "Caballero Poderoso," were produced in Barcelona by Iberica Film. Also produced in Spain, and released by UA, was "Incertidumere."

In Mexico, United Artists released "El Super Loco," made by Exito Films. This picture starred Chato Ortin, a leading Mexican screen comedian. Shortly afterward, the company released the Bustamante and De Fuentes production, "Alla en el Rancho Grande," starring Tito Guizar, known as a radio singer to American audiences, but a more widely known romantic favorite to Latin American audiences. This picture made records, and in some locations, played as many as 20 return engagements. Its success induced the distributors to fit it with English sub-titles and release it domestically, the first Spanish film to which this was done.

UA contracted last season with Felipe Mier's Cinematograficas Internacional, S.A., a Mexican production company, for the release of the following: "Asi es mi Terra" and "Aguila o Sol," both of them starring Cantinflas and Medel, both having received a good response in South America. The last named film is the first Mexican musical with a modern theme. Also contracted for release are "Perjura," now being completed, with Jorge Negrete and Marina Tamayo as stars.

The company further interested itself in Mexican releases by obtaining the distribution rights to FAMA's first production, "Refugiados en Madrid," made in Mexico City with Maria Conesa and Fernado Soler as the stars.

Thus far, UA as shown by the above capitulation, will distribute about seven of the nearly 30 Spanish language films which are being released by American majors. This approximate total of 30 represents about one quarter of the total Spanish language output of about 120 films, from Argentina, Peru, Colombia, Venezuela, Chile, Brazil, and Mexico. Most of the American-released films will have been made in Mexico.

Less Than Half from Hollywood

A further breakdown of all these releases, published in Motion Picture Daily, reveals that fewer than half of the 30 pictures will be made in Hollywood, the reason given for the majority decision being the inability of a Hollywood production, no matter how much talent is imported, to produce, in all the parochial nuances, a genuinely Spanish film. It is said that, exclusive of the Hollywood plans of United Artists, outlined above, emphasis on Spanish production there seems to be with Paramount and 20th Century-Fox. Paramount revived Spanish language production on the coast this year with one film made by Rafael Ramos Cobian, Puerto Rican theatre operator. The film starred Tito Guizar, who leaped to popularity in "Rancho Grande" and is under contract to Paramount. He is being starred in four films for Paramount by Dario Faralla, two of which are completed.

After completing his Paramount commitment, Cobian signed a four-picture deal with 20th Century-Fox, contingent on the success of the first. Production is now starting.

"Ora Ponciano," released by Columbia, rates second to UA's "Rancho Grande."

Columbia has also released one picture produced for the company in Hollywood and another in Mexico City. A deal is being negotiated with Enrique Herrera, Mexican producer, for two or more films.

William Rowland, who turned Spanish language producer this year, is committed to make four or more films for RKO. After completing his first, "Di Que Me Quieres," at Eastern Service Studios, he shifted his base to Mexico City. He has signed Maria Teresa Montoya, leading Mexican actress.

Universal Plans Two

Universal's plans include two films by Fernando de Fuentes, co-producer and director of "Rancho Grande." The company has released two Argentine films.

Monogram is negotiating with Mexico City producers for a six-picture program. Eddie Le Baron's "Castillos en el Aire," made for Monogram in Hollywood, is now in circulation.

Republic, operating through franchise holders, plans no Spanish language releases, but permits its local distributors to add them to the regular list under the company label.

Paramount made the first serious effort to satisfy the demand and produced six films in 1934 and 1935 in the east with Carlos Gardel, Argentine star.

When United Artists was successful with "Rancho Grande," last season, the others decided Spanish films might be worth the experiment. Within the year, theatres in Havana, Mexico City and other centers booked Spanish language films for the first time.

Films can be made inexpensively in the domestic studios. Costs average $30,000, with only one or two understood to have gone to $40,000. Returns in gross revenue have been four and five times the budget in some instances.

Rockefeller-Financed American Film Center Cites Cooperation of Governments in Plan to Exchange Films

The Rockefeller-financed American Film Center has obtained the "full cooperation" of the United States Government, and of other governments, in the furtherance of the organization's new plan to effect an exchange of films between the United States and Latin America for the purpose of creating stronger goodwill within the Americas.

The Film Center wants to be helpful "to the government, to the people of this country, to its film industry, and to the producers," according to Donald Schlesinger, executive director of the organization, which has embarked on a survey of conditions facing the American film industry and the United States government in cultivating better relations with the South American countries, via films.

The non-profit organization, originally formed to promote better films of educational nature for U. S. schools and established in Rockefeller Center, New York, with the financial aid of the Rockefellers and the American National Committee on Intellectual Cooperation, has turned to a correlation of data concerning conditions in the South American market, "purely from a voluntary standpoint, and recognizing the United States Government's interest, and also the recent public interest in happenings below the Equator," according to Mr. Schlesinger.

Industry films like "Wells Fargo" and "The Hardy Family", and government-sponsored pictures such as "The River" and "The Plow That Broke the Plains" are the best sort of material for film interchange, Mr. Schlesinger thinks, because they give an "inspirational view of this country." The March of Time shorts also were commended by him.

The Film Center has a staff of three, John Devine, formerly of the Public Administration committee, a Rockefeller philanthropy, holder of a Rockefeller film fellowship and back from a year spent with the British Film Center; Margaret Summers, who has been connected with the Carnegie Foundation; and Mr. Schlesinger, with a background including the Institute of Human Relations at Yale, the leadership of Chicago University's department of sociology, and with the New York World's Fair.

Government Departments

The State Department has established a Division of Cultural Relations, headed by Ben Cherrington, the first job of which will be to tackle the Latin American problem.

The Government also has an Inter-Departmental Committee on Cooperation with the American Republics which recently recommended the spending of $1,000,000 for propaganda in Latin America, to include a governmental film project, which itself would cost about $176,500. The committee has 74 separate proposals.

The film project would be handled by the United States Film Service of the National Emergency Council. It would produce films about this country; it would produce one film about Latin America; it would establish a film exchange system; and it would install projection rooms and equipment in United States embassies in the countries necessary.

21 Officers and Directors and Large Stockholders Show Dealings in Shares of Their Companies in Ten Months

in Washington

The extent to which the motion picture industry has been singularly free from "inside" stock operations by company officials is demonstrated by records of the U. S. Securities and Exchange Commission, which show that only 21 officers, directors and large stockholders had dealings in the stocks of their companies in the first 11 months of 1938. And those dealings only totaled 195 purchases or sales of the stock of ten companies.

Transactions were particularly limited in the matter of officers' and directors' dealings in Columbia Pictures, Grand National, Loew's, Monogram and Pathe. They were somewhat more numerous, yet not heavy, in Paramount, Pathe, Universal and Warner Brothers. In Twentieth Century-Fox, Chase National Bank, controlling stockholder, in two months sold 114,100 shares of common and 10,000 shares of preferred, reducing its holdings from 340,858 shares of common to 226,758, and its preferred from 681,916 to 671,916 shares.

In the same company, William Goetz sold 20,000 shares of common, Darryl F. Zanuck sold 40,000 common and Joseph M. Schenck 49,199 common and 1,000 preferred.

Reports on Dealings Required

Under the federal acts which the SEC administers, officers, directors and large stockholders of corporations whose securities are registered are required to report all dealings in the equity stocks of their companies. Under such a system, SEC officials easily can determine whether "inside" information is being used by such persons for the purpose of personal gain through market operations.

Review of SEC records for such part of 1938 as so far has been reported discloses that in almost every instance, film company officials are concerned either with increasing their equity in their company or in disposing, gradually and without disturbing the market, of heavy holdings. In not a single case was a motion picture company executive found to have "dodged" in and out of the market, buying and selling to take advantage of price fluctuations.

Few Market Operations

Another marked feature shown by the records was the comparatively small number of company executives who entered upon any market operations whatever. Many officers and directors apparently buy or sell securities but rarely —many of those reporting any transactions whatever for the first ten months of the year had but one or two operations.

Stock dealings of the 21 officers, directors and large stockholders in the stocks of ten film companies for the first 11 months of 1938 were as follows:

Columbia

Jack Cohn, officer and director; holdings Jan. 1, '38: 529 shares of common stock and 32,407 voting trust certificates.

WARNERS PLANNING POPULARITY SURVEY

Seeking to determine both public and exhibitor attitudes on a dozen of its younger contract players, Warner Brothers is mapping out plans for a national survey of the country.

Through literature distributed in theatres and notices on the screen, patrons will be asked to closely observe performances of the players in their new attractions. Using blanks provided by the management, they will file their reports as they leave the theatre.

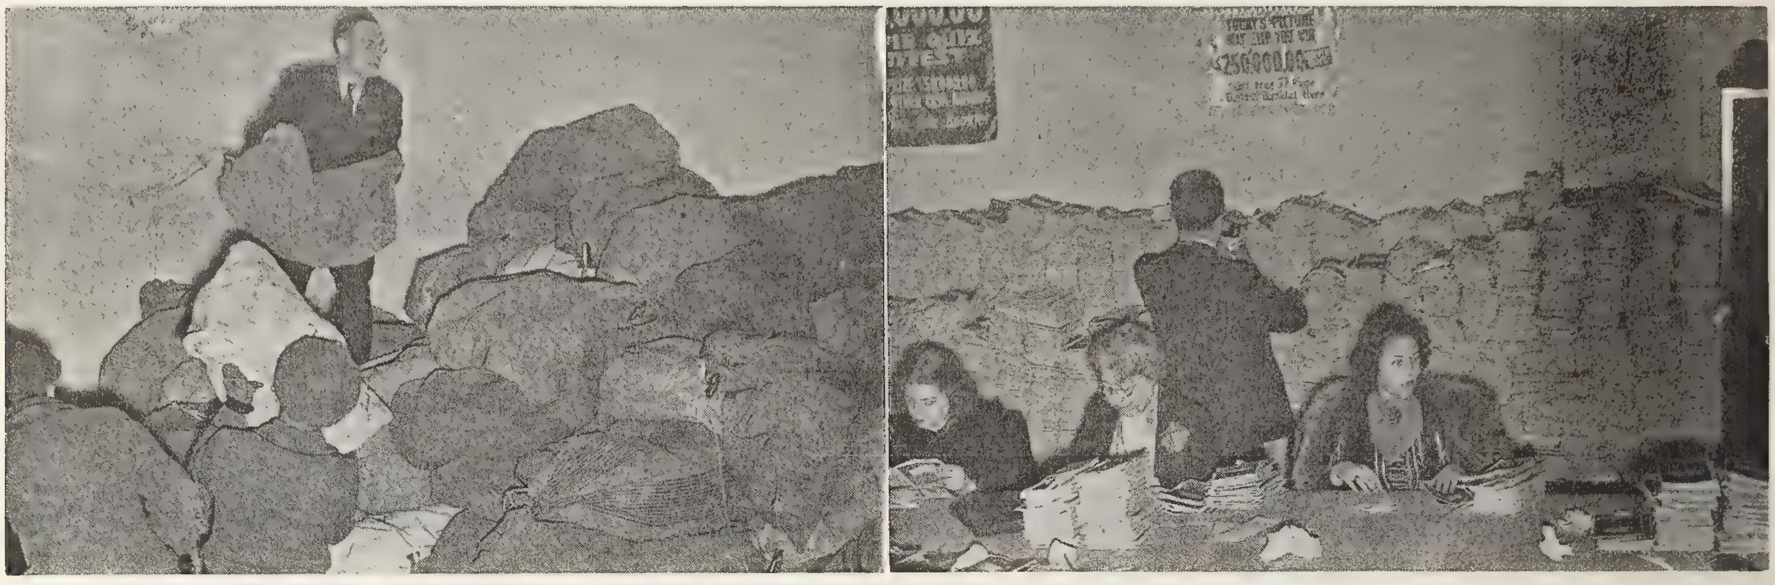
CONTEST BRINGS MILLION REPLIES



The morning mail on Tuesday brought an estimated million replies in the Movie Quiz contest to the offices of Radio & Publications Contests, Inc., at 480 Lexington Avenue, New York. The flood of answers indicated that many contestants had waited until the deadline, December 31st, to submit their entries and it was expected that the mail would continue to be loaded with replies from distant points through the week. Even this final rush, however, was not expected to bring the total number of replies to more than 2,000,000. Jack Todd, above left, head of the contest company, helps pile the mail bags and, at right, the readers start.

MAJORS SERVED IN SUIT AGAINST "QUIZ" CONTEST

Producers and Greatest Year Organization Acting This Week for Dismissal in Court

Following the serving of summonses, the eight largest producing companies, Motion Pictures' Greatest Year, Inc., Moredall Realty Corporation, Bobbydick, Inc., all defendants in the suit brought by Milton Spitz in New York federal district court, charging their violation of the copyright held by him on a game allegedly similar to the "Quiz" contest, are expected to move through their counsel, Schwartz and Frohlich for Columbia Pictures, and Phillips and Nizer for the rest.

The other defendant, Monogram Pictures Corporation, already has filed, through Rosenblatt & Jaffe, an answer to the complaint, denying all of the plaintiff's charges except the one stating that Monogram Pictures is in the business of distributing motion pictures.

The complaint was served on all the defendants except MGM, the United States marshal saying in his report to the court that he "could not find" any offices of MGM in the New York district.

The Nizer office, if refused dismissal, expects then to answer the charges in blanket form for all of its clients

They will contend that there is no similarity between the "U-Spot-It" contest, copyrighted by Mr. Spitz and associates, and the "Movie Quiz" contest.

At the offices of the Motion Pictures Greatest Year, Inc., Harold B. Franklin said that the suit was brought on "very flimsy" evidence.

"I don't think they have a leg to stand on," said Mr. Franklin. "You can term this one of those 'strike' suits, whereby people try to cash in on somebody else's good thing. Maybe they hope to be bought off, but I don't think the companies should do any such thing, in a suit like this."

The complainant's brief, filed through the law firm of Krellberg and Fitzsimmons on December 5, charged the defendants with copying the game, "U-Spot-It," copyrighted in 1936, but never used, by Ernest Maas and Mr. Spitz.

Mr. Spitz seeks damages under the copyright law; costs of the lawsuit; impounding of all "quiz" contest booklets; impounding of all advertising matter; prohibition by the court of the defendants from selling, manufacturing, or exhibiting the booklets; and accounting, and surrender, of all profits derived from the booklets' use; and further damages.

Pictures Specially Treated

In the original game, specially treated pictures were necessary, with scenes "psychologically tricked by various treatments and camera devices as to give these scenes a definite significance" (according to the "U-Spot-It" explanatory literature.) The finale was to be carried out in each theatre, with a judge calling from the audience those members who thought they had seen in a picture certain scenes containing an item mentioned upon a card they received on entering the theatre.

The judge was to ask the contest participant "specially prepared questions . . . if these questions are answered to the satisfaction of the judge, the holder will then be declared a winner and awarded a prize, if there is one."

Stock Exchange Expels J. A. Sisto

Joseph A. Sisto, head of the Wall Street brokerage firm of J. A. Sisto and Company, was expelled last Thursday from the New York Stock Exchange, the Exchange committee on member firms charging that he had sold the firm's own stock to the Sisto Financial Corporation, which he controlled, at a substantial and arbitrary mark-up in price, buying for 15⅛ a share and selling on or about the same date for 23.

Mr. Sisto publicly said, "In my opinion my conduct was in all respects proper."

He had at various times been connected financially in motion pictures.

Russell Birdwell Resigns From Selznick Company

David O. Selznick, president of Selznick International, this week announced the resignation of Russell Birdwell, who has headed the company's publicity, advertising and exploitation department since the organization of the film corporation three years ago. Mr. Selznick referred to Mr. Birdwell as "Hollywood's best press agent and ambassador of public good will."

Mr. Birdwell leaves the company on February 1st. He said he would open offices in Beverly Hills, New York and Washington, D. C., and would head a publicity and public relations company that will operate internationally.

Bryant Theatre Supply Company, Inc., Charlotte, N. C., has been formed with authorized capital of $100,000 by Max W. Bryant of Rock Hill, S. C.; J. B. Erskine and T. B. Autrey, both of Charlotte.

PLAN IN WORK TO GET HOLLYWOOD SUPPORT BACK TO BROADWAY STAGE

Representatives of Stage and Films Meeting to End Differences; Theatres Ask Dramatists for Committee Session

Formal re-entry of motion picture money into stage production is hoped for both by Broadway stage and motion picture interests, representatives of each field meeting to iron out the differences that caused Hollywood producers to withdraw from supporting plays more than two years ago.

The latest development is a notice sent to the Dramatists Guild by the League for New York Theatres, asking for a meeting of the Joint Advisory Committee on Motion Pictures. The committee is composed of Brock Pemberton, Marcus Heiman, Lee Shubert, Warren P. Munsell and Herman Shumlin for the managers, with Max Gordon, James R. Ullman, Lawrence Langner, Arthur Hopkins and L. Lawrence Weber as alternates. For the Guild, there are Sidney Howard, Kenyon Nicholson, Owen Davis, Sr., Howard Lindsay and John Howard Lawson, with Marc Connelly, Robert Sherwood, George Abbott, Elmer Rice and Lillian Hellman as alternates.

With Sidney Fleisher as arbiter, the purpose of the meeting would be to hasten steps to bring about the re-entry of motion picture backing to the legitimate stage, an end long sought and approved by Equity, the stagehands, scenic artists and similar groups, who see in this a way to further employment.

Sidney Fleisher, attorney for the Dramatists Guild; Jacob Wilk, eastern story editor for Warner Brothers, and Luise Sillcox, secretary of the Dramatists Guild, have been working on a plan which would be acceptable to both interests. Mr. Fleisher, Mr. Wilk and J. Robert Rubin, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vice-president and general counsel, are planning to meet soon in order to bring the matter down to concrete terms.

Author Would Have Option

Under the new plan, as tentatively worked out by the Guild, the author of a play would have the option of working under the plan or under his present status as designated by the basic agreement now in effect. If he wished to work under the new plan, as it now shapes up, the playwright would get a flat sum, as yet undesignated, which would be considered as an advance against the picture rights. The play then would be produced by the film company, with that company paying the author an additional sum equivalent to a percentage of the box office receipts. The amount of that percentage is still undecided, but the Guild is working on a schedule based on the experiences of former legitimate plays.

For the purposes of figuring the percentage, roadshows and foreign productions would also be included, the playwright having the right to send out road companies if the manager decides against it. The play could not be closed while it continues to make a certain sum. The basis for closing is among the more important things remaining to be worked out, the Guild's position being that the author should have the right to continue the run even if the play may seem to be in a position to close.

EQUITY ASKS FOR CARD EXCHANGE

At the quarterly meeting of Actors Equity a resolution was passed asking for Equity council to take the initiative in pressing for interchangeability of cards among the 13 branches of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America, parent body of stage and screen groups.

A new policy permitting suspension for six months and a $500 fine for members who pay their agents excessive commissions was endorsed. The meeting, at which 770 members were present, was presided over by Arthur Byron.

The dispute between the motion picture representatives and the dramatists dates from the spring of 1936, at which time the dramatists demanded a new deal, involving two main changes; division of the proceeds of the film rights was changed from 50-50 as between author and producer to 60-40, and control of the disposition of the film rights was kept by the author, subject to the supervision of the Dramatists' Guild. At this the film companies withdrew their support. Those familiar with the situation pointed out that it was scarcely an inviting prospect to finance a play, running the risk of a possible loss, and then be outbid by a rival film company for the motion picture rights to that play. It has been said that the larger film companies had a "gentlemen's agreement" among themselves not to bid on plays which had been financed by one of their member companies, but this was not enough to counteract the effects of the proposed "new" agreement. Thus there was no play produced on Broadway during the 1937-38 season and bought by any film interest which had the backing of a film company.

Last September, just prior to the second convention of the American Theatre Council, which is composed of producers, actors, stage designers and members of other stage crafts, an idea was proposed for conciliation, the general feeling being that all connected with the theatre had suffered. Proposed by James J. Brennan, vice-president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, the idea was supported by such men as Paul Dullzell, executive secretary of Actors' Equity and James F. Reilly, executive secretary of The League of New York Theatres. However, no invitation to attend the convention was sent any motion picture representative. That had been suggested but dropped.

Viewpoints of Three Parties

The problem may be broken down into the viewpoints of the three parties most concerned; the dramatists, the stage producers and the film companies. The point of view of the dramatist is that the first basic agreement with the producers, while doing much to remedy conditions, still left the dramatist the weaker member in any bargaining which was to be done, especially if he was not one of the top-notch "name" playwrights. The "new" basic agreement was meant to give the playwright more protection, but it did so at a price the film companies were not willing to meet when they turned producers by backing a play.

The Guild feels that it is fair, pointing out that under the present agreement the picture company backing a play gets the first opportunity to buy that play, at a price set by the author himself and the negotiator for the Guild, Mr. Fleisher. If that price is rejected, the play goes to the open market, where, if not purchased at that price, it again is offered the film company at a reduced price, so that the motion picture firm is always in the position of being offered the play first.

Meanwhile the producers had to accept the plan; but did so feeling that they were not being recompensed properly for the work which goes into the making of a completed stage play, especially in being deprived of a voice in the disposition of the film rights.

Free to Shop About

The film companies, having refused the terms of the agreement, now find themselves in the position of being free to shop where they please for plays, but at the expense of young talent which is not given a chance to perform because, lacking film money, Broadway has fewer plays than might be produced otherwise. At the same time, it has been pointed out that were the motion picture companies to re-enter the producing field, they would be in the anomalous position of helping the Dramatists Guild in the east while declaring "war" on their affiliate, the Screen Writers Guild, on the coast, so that a decision to back Broadway productions might be seen as depending upon a peace with the Writers Guild called exceedingly unlikely now that the film companies have refused to recognize the union as sole bargaining agent. At the same time, this question may not be of any import, it has been pointed out, as the Writers Guild is concerned with Hollywood staff writers, as against the free-lance dramatists in the Guild.

Interest in the experimental theatre has been stimulated by the appointment of a committee to study the matter by Actors' Equity. The general complaint has been that rehearsal costs and minimum wage scales have prevented groups of actors from working in the theatre on an experimental or cooperative basis. The committee is composed entirely of Equity members, with Margaret Webster, Worthington Minor and Antoinette Perry the directors who will serve with Hugh Rennie and Winifred Lenihan, chairman. Heretofore, the council has imposed the same terms on both cooperative and commercial enterprises, on the theory that if the rules were relaxed, commercial producers would use it for tryout purposes, and evade the regular rehearsal payments.

Three State Exhibitor Units Hold Meetings

Three exhibitor organizations held meetings this week, the Independent Theatre Owners of West Virginia and the West Virginia Managers Association holding a joint annual session Tuesday at Charlestown, W. Va.

On Friday, the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association is to meet in Philadelphia, with Lewen Pizor, president, conducting a general discussion on trade reform developments, and such to be followed by the election of directors for the year.

James R. Grainger, president of Republic, has signed the Blumenfield circuit of 14 theatres in the San Francisco territory for the company's product. Joseph Blumenfield signed for the circuit.

Ridin' the Range

(Republic)

Western

Over a two-year period, Gene Autry, whose pictures rarely if ever are seen in big city deluxe theatres, has proved the best patron pulling western star. Like William Boyd and Jack Holt, he has proved himself the favorite of small town audiences. His personality and talents of course have contributed in a large measure to his success, but it would be unwise to deny that he also has had the benefit of good stories, better than average production and the assistance of some capable supporting players.

All the values that have proved themselves in the past are being combined in "Ridin' the Range," first 1939 feature for the box office leader. The story, based on an original by Paul Franklin for which he and Charles Powell did the screen play, and which Jack Townley is directing, is sound and logical. All its romance, melodrama, comedy and action stems from the hero's efforts to enforce a cattle guarantee and the underhanded efforts of cattle raisers, brokers and rustlers to circumvent it.

It appears that there will be a full quota of action and excitement in the show, and considerably more comedy than is usual in an Autry picture. Inasmuch as an elephant is important in developing the plot, the result should be that the picture will have more appeal to the youngsters, if that is possible, than the routine Autry show.

Release date: About Jan. 25, 1939.

Problem Play

Devotion to her career as a doctor wrecks a woman's home, drives her husband into another woman's arms and alienates her from her daughter. An emergency operation upon the critically injured child, performed in midair by her mother, reunites the family. That is the plot of "Dr. Judith Randall." The theme, with all its ramifications and variations, is well known.

The story is an original by Miriam Geiger and Alice Altschuler. The screen play was prepared by Joseph Moncure March, author of and contributor to many Paramount screen stories, and remembered for his "Let 'Em Have It," "Jealousy" and "Jennie Gerhardt."

Frieda Inescort, who was outstanding in Republic's "Portia on Trial," in which she assayed the part of a woman attorney, will be starred in the title role. Her principal supporting cast will be made up of Henry Wilcoxon, as the husband, Claire Dodd, now in "Charlie Chan in Honolulu," who will appear as the other woman, and Sybil Jason, presently in "Comet Over Broadway," as the child.

Sidney Salkow, whose recent credits are familiar, is directing.

Release date: To be determined.

Son of Frankenstein

(Universal)

Melodrama

Anyone who has been in the business very long will remember the sensation created by the original "Frankenstein." The recent reissue of horror pictures has been an attempt to recapitalize on that. In summary, "The Son of Frankenstein" is an out-and-out terror production. Frankenstein's son honestly wants to prove that his father was the first to create human life and not an instrument of destruction, when he brings the Monster to life again.

Basil Rathbone, who has contributed much to many great pictures of late, "The Adventures of Robin Hood," "If I Were King" and "Dawn Patrol," will be seen as the son of Frankenstin. Boris Karloff, creator of the role in "Frankenstein" and "The Bride of Frankenstein," again will be the Monster. Bela Lugosi, whose name is synonymous with terror pictures because of "Dracula," will be seen in a grim and forceful role. With this trio the backbone of the production, the supporting company will include Josephine Hutchinson, last in "The Crime of Dr. Hellett" and "I Married a Doctor," Lionel Atwill, presently in "The Great Waltz," and Donnie Dunagan, four-year-old boy seen in "Mother Carey's Chickens." Edgar Norton and Emma Dunn have character roles.

Willis Cooper, contributor to several "Mr. Moto" screen plays, wrote the original story. It is being directed by Rowland V. Lee, maker of "Service Deluxe," and remembered for "Count of Monte Cristo," "Cardinal Richelieu" and "Zoo in Budapest."

Release date: January 13, 1938.

Yes, My Darling Daughter

(Warner Bros.)

Romantic Comedy

The stars of "Yes, My Darling Daughter," will be Priscilla Lane and Jeffrey Lynn, who were the young lovers in "Four Daughters." Miss Lane also was in "Brother Rat." The capable supporting cast will include Fay Bainter, whose latest picture is "The Shining Hour"; Roland Young, of "Topper" repute; Genevieve Tobin, presently in "Dramatic School," Ian Hunter, May Robson, Paul Panzer and Clem Bevans.

"Yes, My Darling Daughter" is a comedy of young love. Originally it was a stage play by Mark Reed. It will come to the screen practically unchanged in spirit or idea except the influence of more varied backgrounds. The screen play by Casey Robinson is an amusing but nonetheless human and sympathetic consideration of young love. The theme is somewhat daring in outline, yet everything is being treated in good taste. William Keighley, who made "Brother Rat," is directing.

Situations and dialogue will reflect the modern tone. The two young folk, so much in love that they can't wait to get married, plan a weekend together. In a conflict of liberalism versus maternal instinct, the mother gives her consent. The father, learning of the incident, starts out in shotgun pursuit. Then the grandmother takes a hand.

Navy Secrets

(Monogram)

Spy Melodrama

Current spy activities and the prominence given them in newspaper stories have once again made the spy story an old entertainment standby, a subject of production interest. Of "Navy Secrets," formerly titled "Navy Girl," it might be noted that it does not reveal itself as a spy story until it has reached about the halfway point. Then it becomes one in which intrigue, melodrama, conflicting romance, thrill action and surprise, as well as other standard ingredients, are incorporated.

For name value "Navy Secrets" will offer Grant Withers, Fay Wray, Dewey Robinson, Andre Charon, Robert Frazer, Craig Reynolds, George Sorell, William Von Brincken, Joseph Crehan, Duke York and Arthur Housman. Withers appears as a naval petty officer and Miss Wray as a girl who likes sailors. For some time romance is the principal theme dealt with, but when what looks like ordinary gang melodrama takes a hand, the picture turns to its true theme.

The subject is based on a Cosmopolitan magazine story, "Shore Leave," by Steve Fisher. Harvey Gates did the screen play. Howard Bretherton is directing.

Released date: January 16, 1939 (tentative.)

Professor Steps Out

(Warner Bros.)

Comedy with Music

The last picture for Dick Powell on his Warner contract will have comedy, romance and music woven into its story. Jerry Wald and Richard Macaulay, adept in the preparation of easy-going cinematic material, wrote the original screen play. The music and lyrics were composed by Harry Warren and Johnny Mercer. As were the screen play authors, the two last-named were contributors to such films as "Brother Rat," "Head Over Heels" and "Garden of the Moon." Ray Enright, maker of many of the films in which Joe E. Brown starred for Warners, "Head over Heels," "Golddiggers in Paris" and "Swing Your Lady," is directing, while the show will come under the production supervision of Sam Bischoff.

The story concerns a young college professor who, under the puritanic dominance of three old maid aunts, devotes his talents to composing symphonic music. Journeying to New York and coming under the influence of another aunt, he becomes the victim of Tin Pan Alley chicanery that establishes him as the idol of the jitterbugs.

Powell will have the assistance of a worthy troupe of players in bringing the story to screen realism. The heroine is Gale Page, now in "Heart of the North," and the woman of intrigue is Ann Sheridan, featured now in "Angels with Dirty Faces." Zasu Pitts, Vera Lewis and Elisabeth Dunne are the old maid aunts, while Helen Broderic is the one with modern ideas. Allen Jenkins, Ronald Reagan and Jerry Colonna have important parts, as have Maxie Rosenbloom, Halliwell Hobbes, William Davidson, Granville Bates, Hobart Cavanaugh and Grady Sutton.

Hollywood's motion picture producers, in their continuing search for material for the nation's screens, bought 546 feature stories in 1938 at an estimated total cost of $2,730,000.

The year's acquisitions again dropped in number, as those made in 1937 had fallen below the purchases made in 1936. Presumably as a result of overstocked studio story vaults, a poor stage season and some studio retrenchment, 102 fewer stories were bought in 1938 than the 648 purchased in 1937; a decline, however, less sharp than in 1937 when 244 fewer properties were purchased than in 1936.

In terms of money, with all figures based on the generally accepted average expenditure of $5,000 a story (with many individual cases falling above or below this median mark), the estimated 1938 figure of $2,730,000 show a drop of $510,000 compared to the estimated $3,240,000 spent in 1937; which in turn was $1,265,000 below the estimated $4,505,000 for 1936.

As in the past three years, original stories accounted for more than half of all the material purchased. In this category, also, there was a proportional drop, with 316 originals accounting for 58 per cent of the 1938 total, as against the 390 which amounted to 60 per cent of the 1937 purchases. In 1936, with the high mark of 892 properties bought, originals accounted for 497, or 55 per cent of the total.

A comparison of other sources for the last three years follows:

	1936	1937	1938
Books	170	104	143
Magazines	167	79	57
Plays	58	75	30

The steady decrease in the purchase of magazine stories continued, and this despite the inclusion in the 1938 magazine purchases of two comic cartoons and a newspaper serial. In 1938, the magazine stories purchased accounted for 10 per cent of the total properties, the same percentage of the whole as in 1937; while in 1936 18 per cent of the acquisitions had been magazine stories.

Book Purchases Rise

Book purchases gained proportionately over those made in 1937, being 26 per cent of all buys, compared to 16 per cent in the latter year; though numerically still not up to the 1936 figure of 170, which however, accounted for only 19 per cent of the far larger total purchases.

The number of plays acquired declined to the lowest ebb in four years, with 30 plays accounting for but five per cent of all purchases; as against the 75 plays which counted for 10 per cent in 1937, and the 58 dramatic works or six per cent of the 1936 total.

Among the outstanding properties acquired in 1938 were the plays "On Borrowed Time," by Paul Osborn; "I Married an Angel," by Vassary Janos; "Babes in Arms," by Richard Rogers and Lorenz Hart; "Show Boat," by Edna Ferber, Jerome Kern and Oscar Hammerstein, and "The Prince of Pilsen," by Frank Fixley and Gustave Luders, all purchased by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; as were the novels "May Flavin," by Myron Brinig; "The Unvanquished," by William Faulkner, and "The Yearling," by Marjorie Rawling. Twentieth Century-Fox bought Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's "Hound of the Baskervilles"; Louis Bromfield's "The Rains Came," and Walter Edmonds' "Drums Along the Mohawk," among others. One of Paramount's most outstanding acquisitions was "The Cat and the Canary," famous play by John Willard, screen rights to which were bought from Universal. The same company also bought "Disputed Passage," Lloyd C. Douglas' novel, and "What a Life," play by Clifford Goldsmith and Samuel A. Taylor.

Other Notable Properties

Two notable properties bought by Warner Brothers, both for Bette Davis, were Maxwell Anderson's play, "Elizabeth the Queen," and "All This and Heaven, Too," novel by Rachel Field. United Artists, through its component member-producers, made some of the highlight purchases of the year. Selznick International purchased Daphne du Maurier's novel "Rebecca," paying $50,000 for the book; "Second Meeting," magazine serial by Lucian Carey, and "Of Great Riches," by Rose Franken, among other important buys. Edward Small acquired "My Son, My Son," a novel by Howard Spring; while Alexander Korda purchased the rights to Rudyard Kipling's "Jungle Book," and Walter Wanger bought Sacha Guitry's "Illusionist." Samuel Goldwyn purchased Edna Ferber's "Nobody's in Town," which appeared as both a magazine story and a book, and Hal Roach bought A. P. Herbert's book, "The Water Gypsies."

Purchased by RKO were the "Saint" series of novels by Leslie Charteris, and "The Night of January 16th," play by Ayn Rand. Important among Universal's buys during the year were "Modern Cinderella," a novel by James M. Cain; "Bull by the Horns," novel by Charles Bonner, and "Underpup," magazine story by I. A. R. Wylie. Columbia, among its more outstanding purchases, numbered "Golden Boy," play by Clifford Odets, and Chick Young's cartoon strip, "Blondie."

43 Bought in December

In December, 12 producers purchased a total of 43 properties, the lowest number since last July. Heading the list was Paramount, due to the acquisition of 11 magazine stories by Frank Gruber, about "Oliver Quade," the "human encyclopedia" character, which were purchased for Lynne Overman. In addition to another magazine story, Paramount also bought five originals and one novel.

The second largest purchaser was Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, always active in the literary market, with five originals and two well known plays, "Babes in Arms" and "The Prince of Pilsen." Third came Warner Brothers, with five originals, among them "Trail's End," sequel to "Heart of the North," and "Invisible Stripes," by Warden Lewis E. Lawes of Sing Sing, and Jonathan Finn. Universal acquired three originals; Grand National, two; R.K.O. an original and a novel, "The Flying Yorkshireman," by Eric Knight, bought for Eddie Cantor; and Twentieth Century-Fox, Monogram, United Artists, Republic, Collective Film Producers and Victory Pictures, one original apiece.

For the fifth successive month, originals outnumbered all other forms of material, accounting for 27 of the 43 purchases, or 63 per cent. Magazine stories were 28 per cent of the total, while there were but two novels and two plays bought.

Members of the Academy Research Council's Process Projection Equipment Committee met in Hollywood Wednesday to approve the final draft of recommendations covering the standardization of equipment used in process and special effect work in the studios.

Dufaycolor in American Hands

As of the first of this year, control of Dufaycolor, Inc., color-film concern, has passed from English to American hands, with exclusively American management taking over the operation of the company, according to a statement issued by Pierpont M. Hamilton, president of the new company, Dufaycolor Company, Inc., which has offices at 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York. Dufaycolor film was developed in England and introduced in this country under English auspices.

In 1937, Mr. Hamilton had visited Dufay-Chromex, Ltd., in London, to discuss plans for the development and distribution of Dufaycolor film in the western hemisphere and was invited to assume management of their American company. Experience in the marketing and processing of Dufaycolor film in the United States, according to Mr. Hamilton, confirmed his impression that there existed a vast market for a low cost film which made it possible to take color photographs in any camera. He accordingly completed arrangements with the English company whereby ownership and control of Dufaycolor in the U. S. passed into American hands.

The new management, in addition to supplying color film for both amateur and professional use, contemplates making Dufaycolor immediately available to the motion picture industry. In this field Dufaycolor film makes it possible, it is claimed, to take pictures in full color, using present standard equipment, the studio shooting the picture with a single strip of negative in its own cameras and doing its own processing and printing, making it possible to see "rushes" as quickly as in black and white.

Music Hall Host to 6,000 At New York Fair Rally

New York City's Radio City Music Hall was host to 6,000 people Sunday morning at a ceremony in connection with the opening on April 30 of the New York World's Fair. Guest speakers Mayor LaGuardia and Dorothy Thompson, writer for the New York Herald-Tribune, emphasized the importance of adhering to democracy. The rally was entitled "The Dawn of a New Day."

Other speakers were former Judge John J. Burns, of the Superior Court of Massachusetts; William Church Osborn, president of the Temple of Religion at the Fair; and Grover A. Whalen, president of the Fair. Bishop Stephen J. Donahue, administrator of the New York archdiocese, pronounced the invocation; and Dr. David de Sola Pool, president of the Synagogue Council of America, the benediction. Music was supplied by a Local 802, American Federation of Musicians, symphony orchestra, conducted by Erno Rapee and Gennaro Papi; The Paulist Choristers; the Schola Cantorum; and Giovanni Martinelli, of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Decisions Vary On Ticket Code

In the first legal test of the ticket price-fixing code enforced by the League of New York Theatres, which has been an object of heated dispute since becoming effective September 1st, one judge granted a temporary injunction restraining the League from enforcing the code, and another granted an order which held the restraining order in abeyance until Friday. The Acme Theatre Ticket Office, not a signatory of the code, instituted the action on Saturday, New Year's Eve, which resulted in the granting of the injunction by New York Supreme Court Justice William Harman Black, who retired from the bench due to age that same day. Shortly afterward, Presiding Justice Francis Martin of the Appellate Division issued the order holding the other in abeyance, this being done before brokers had a chance to raise prices of tickets for New Years Eve and week-end performances above the producer-fixed minimum premiums of 75 cents over the listed price for orchestra seats and 50 cents for balcony seats.

According to certain brokers, the sale of New Year's Eve tickets had become largely an "academic" one, since the hit shows had been sold out in any event; but in the affidavit submitted to Justice Martin by Milton Weinberger, counsel for the League, it was claimed that the public would be assessed an additional estimated $1,000,000 if the injunction were permitted to stand. Attached to the affidavit was a $4.40 ticket bought from a non-signatory broker for $8.80, as symbolic of the large mark-ups which were possible.

TWO BLOCK BOOKING BILLS FILED; NEW LEGISLATION LOOMS IN STATES

26 Legislative Sessions Start in States, with 15 More Next Week; Exhibitors See Threat of "Freak" Measures

The opening of 26 new state legislative sessions and another 15 next week brings to the motion picture business, particularly to exhibition, the usual threats of adverse legislation, particularly new taxation.

Little change, in the form of relief or new laws, is seen on state censorship or Sunday "blue" laws, but, as in the past, other socalled "freak" measures are expected. Some state exhibition "divorcement" proposals may be projected.

There are possibilities of taxation aid in California. The new governor, Cuthbert Olson, said the other day that he would consider means of lightening the tax burdens of film players, taking into consideration that the career life of a film star is short, although earning large pay, and that relief should be considered. On the subject of state exhibition divorce laws, particularly in California, Governor Olson asserted that in his opinion the federal anti-trust suits will determine what is to be done in state legislatures.

Court action against Louisiana taxation was started this week when large distributors filed suits in New Orleans seeking reductions of the merchandising tax assessments, the state tax commission having valued assessments of each of the companies at $50,000.

Maryland exhibitors now fear that a previously promised reduction of state theatre taxes will not be forthcoming.

Exhibitors Unite Protests

Following a general legislation meeting called in St. Louis by Fred Wehrenberg, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Missouri and Southern Illinois, the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association and the Exhibitors Association of Chicago will join in a united fight against adverse film legislation in the three states.

The biggest threat from 1939's unicameral session of the legislature in Nebraska will be theatre divorcement, modeled along the lines of the presently disputed North Dakota plan. In addition there are four other possible bills which have been brought to the attention of R. R. Livingston, who, besides being the manager-owner of the Capitol theatre in Lincoln, Neb., is the contact between the theatre business and legislation.

Three of the suggested bills have been up before—the graduated tax on chain theatres, starting at $250 per house for the first two houses, and decreasing per house as the number increases; a 10 per cent tax on gross film rentals and gross box office take; and labor's appeal for a two-man booth.

A legislator reported to Mr. Livingston that he was considering a bill to limit straight programs to 150 minutes, which would almost eliminate duals in Nebraska.

New York Lawmakers Meet

New York State's legislature convened at Albany Wednesday for its annual session. Among the 3,000 bills anticipated are at least a score of direct concern to the motion picture industry. Many of the bills directed at some phase of the picture business have never received serious consideration, while others have labor union and consumer group backing.

Generally speaking, New York's film legislative actions are to be centered on an eight-point front:

1. Renewal of the fight against the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, with rural exhibitors backing an amendment to the general business law in relation to copyrighted vocal or instrumental musical compositions.

2. An effort to repeal the laws of 1921 which set up censorship provisions in relation to licensing of films and an effort to secure for the motion picture industry "freedom of speech" to give it the same right of expression as that now enjoyed by newspapers. Several bills extending freedom of speech of the films and radio were introduced and deliberated at New York's Constitutional Convention last summer.

3. Renewal of the fight to regulate fee-charging employment agencies. Backed by both the State Federation of Labor, official AFL group, and the CIO, this measure is backed by Paul Moss, New York City Commissioner of Licenses.

Direct Levy Proposed

4. Efforts to reduce the gasoline tax by substituting a direct levy on film footage, advanced for the last three years.

5. IATSE-backed two-men-in-a-booth bill, providing mandatory employment of two projectionists in every theatre booth as a safety measure. Bill has the backing of the State Federation of Labor.

6. In the wake of recent conferences between New York's License Commissioner Paul Moss and small theatre-owners, a demand for stringent enforcement and strengthening of laws bearing on the employment of matrons is to be made.

7. Perennial fight on the regulation of billboards along New York State's highways. A state mandate on the subject was lost in last year's Constitutional Convention by only two votes.

8. Resubmission of legislation intended to prevent the sale of tickets to patrons when no seats are available.

City Tax Compromise

A compromise on sales tax penalties reached with New York City Tuesday provides for a seven per cent payment to the city by distributors on the principal amount of the tax due. The city originally levied a charge of one per cent per month on individual company taxes as a penalty in addition to the sales tax.

North Dakota has a two per cent sales tax. As it applies to theatre admissions, it is administered on a bracket basis—nothing for single 10-cent admissions, 1 cent for tickets adding from 15 cents to 50 cents, two cents over that amount. This tax expires July 1, but it is expected to be renewed at the coming session.

That a proposition to supplant the sales tax with a flat percentage tax on admission—probably in the neighborhood of 10 per cent—will be suggested is virtually a certainty. Such a bill was introduced at the 1937 session but did not get beyond committee hearing.

In Ohio, the Independent Theatre Owners is warning exhibitors to contact their state legislature to plead against any increase in admission taxes, with the owners viewing particularly the possibilities of increasing the present three per cent tax to ten.

No adverse legislation is expected in Pennsylvania.

A theatre divorcement proposal is reported to be under consideration for the new Oklahoma legislature.

Successors to Pettengill Bill Submitted in House; Action Expected to Await Outcome of Government Suit in Equity

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

The first few hours of the new session of Congress on Wednesday brought the first attacks of the year on motion pictures.

Congressman Andrew Edmiston (Dem., W. Va.), introduced an anti-block selling and anti-blind buying proposal similar to the Pettengill bill of several previous sessions.

A second anti-blind selling bill was introduced by Congressman Francis D. Culkin (Rep., N. Y.), who also submitted a bill calling for a Federal Film Commission to regulate and govern the industry.

Senator Matthew M. Neely (Dem., W. Va.), will reintroduce his block booking bill in a few days, and Congressman Lyle Boren (Dem., Okla.), is also expected to move similarly.

Congressman J. B. Daily (Dem., Pa.), asked changes in the copyright laws which the industry has been seeking for years.

There are indications that no consideration will be given block booking until the probable outcome of the Department of Justice suit against the majors can be forecast.

Most probable subject of legislation foreseen is the proposed Bureau of Fine Arts, which was the subject of lengthy hearings last session by House and Senate committees.

Other possible matters on which bills will be introduced are the long-fought, and largely ineffective, ban on the interstate distribution of fight films; amendment of the copyright law, in which interest has largely been dissipated in the past year or two, largely as a result of developments in Europe and an increasing sentiment here against further "foreign entanglements"; the barring of alien actors, sought last year by Representative Samuel Dickstein (Dem., N. Y), chairman of the House immigration committee, which "killed" his bill, and establishment of a central motion picture agency, possibly in the Government Printing Office, for all film activities of the Government.

Patent legislation, the subject of hearings last year, may be reintroduced, but action is likely to be withheld pending receipt of recommendations from the Temporary National Economic Committee, which last month started to investigate the patent situation in "big business."

From sources other than the President will come proposals for amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, the Walsh-Healey Act controlling wages to be paid by contractors holding Government awards, and the Fair Labor Standards Act, establishment of a new agricultural program, and tax revision.

Consideration of tax legislation will involve new studies of the levies on corporations which, unless renewed, will expire at the end of 1939. This phase will be featured by an effort to eliminate the last vestiges of the undistributed profits tax and bring readoption of the system of taxing corporations at a flat rate. A number of the so-called "nuisance" taxes also are to be acted upon. The 10 per cent amusement levy is expected to be extended two years.

$532,153 AWARDED AGAINST MGM IN "LETTY LYNTON" PLAGIARISM CASE

Damages in Favor of Edward Sheldon and Margaret Ayer Barnes in Copyright Suit Set All-Time Record

Establishing an all-time high in the amount of damages awarded in a motion picture plagiarism suit, Federal Judge Vincent L. Leibell, in New York district court, last Friday, confirmed the award in favor of Edward Sheldon and Margaret Ayer Barnes for copyright infringement of their play "Dishonored Lady," by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film, "Letty Lynton." Judge Leibell reduced the award from the $587,604 suggested by Special Master Gordon Auchincloss to $532,153. MGM lost the suit last year, the present action determining the amount of damages.

It is reported that an appeal will be taken, which would bring the case to the circuit court of appeals, from which, if another appeal were taken by either side, it would go before the United States supreme court.

The case has been in the courts since 1934, when Judge Woolsey dismissed it, a decision which was reversed by the court of appeals. This court ordered the appointment of a special master to determine the film's earnings.

"Dishonored Lady" had been a play which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had agreed to buy for $30,000 if it could pass the industry's Moral Production Standards. Apparently it could not, and the deal was allowed to lapse. Subsequently the motion picture company purchased the rights to a novel, "Letty Lynton," by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, based on the same theme, that of the murder trial of Madeleine Smith in Scotland in 1857.

After deductions for taxes, overhead, and the like, Judge Leibell found the profits to be: Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, $248,095.09; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, $59,570.63; Loew's, Inc., $84,209.51, Culver Export Corporation, $140,278.25. Additional assessments against the defendants include $55,000 for O'Brien, Driscoll and Raftery, attorneys for the plaintiffs, scaled down from a request for $135,000, and $15,305 for Mr. Auchincloss, cut from a request for $20,000.

Judge Leibell, in his report, said:

"In my opinion it is punitive and unjust to award all the net profits of the motion picture 'Letty Lynton' to the complainants in this case. Yet under the wording of the Copyright Act as interpreted by the decisions of the appellate courts, I can do nothing less. The rule for apportioning profits, followed in patent infringement cases, should not be difficult of application to copyright infringement cases." The major companies are now seeking to have the copyright laws amended.

Judge Leibell's reference was to the fact that in patent cases the courts had worked out a theory of apportionment to determine the exact amount representing the value contributed to an article by the particular invention used without permission.

He added: "An allowance to complainants of 25 per cent of the net profits, as restated, or about $133,000, would be such a sum as could be justly fixed as a limit beyond which complainants would be receiving profits in no way attributable to the use of their play in the production of the picture."

Arnold Sets Up a Strong Position On Consent Decree in U. S. Trust Cases

Declaring that the full potentialities of a consent decree in federal trust cases can be realized only through concurrent use of both criminal and civil procedures, Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, head of the U. S. Department of Justice anti-trust division, this week restated the four principles by which he will be guided in accepting a consent decree in such cases, presumably including the one now pending against the motion picture business.

Discussing the monopoly situation in his annual report, Mr. Arnold disclosed that four new prosecutions are being readied for presentation to the federal courts, but did not disclose the groups which are to be attacked.

To attain the objectives aimed at by the Department, he asserted, it will be necessary further to increase the staff of the anti-trust division, now employing 97 lawyers, and secure amendment of the anti-trust laws as current cases disclose weaknesses in those statutes as applied to particular industry.

Mr. Arnold's recommendation for specific application of the monopoly laws to individual industries was seen in Washington as presaging a drive for divorcing exhibition from production or for the outlawing of block booking in the event the film suit fails to achieve those aims.

Discussing the attitude of the Department toward consent decrees, the Assistant Attorney General stated the proposal for a consent decree must be voluntary, explaining that this means that "the Department will in no instance start negotiations or suggest compromises on the basis of which prosecution would be dropped"; the Department will not compromise criminal cases on the mere promise to reform; it will accept only proposals which restore competitive conditions in a way which could not be accomplished by prosecution; and it will submit all such proposals to an impartial judicial tribunal and thus be guided by the judgment of the court before it takes final action. And, once committed to accceptance of a consent decree, the Department will issue a public statement giving the reasons for its action.

"At all times," Mr. Arnold declared, "the test of whether a consent decree should be accepted must be whether it will benefit the public, not whether it will give relief to the Department," and "as so used, it is believed that the consent decree can be of assistance in realizing the balanced objective of checking monopoly control and industrial empire building, and eliminating economic toll bridges, while encouraging legitimate and efficient mass production and facilitating the maintenance of orderly markets. Possibly a program of this sort could be carried forward with even greater effect and economy if an appropriate power to implement the antitrust laws by rules and regulations were vested by law in some appropriate agency," he concluded.

Three More Suits Concern Copyright

Sonja Henie has been made co-defendant in Fred Walton's suit against Twentieth Century-Fox in which he alleges that the plot of the film "Thin Ice" was plagiarized from his play "Weather Permitting", according to International News Service. The suit was filed in federal court in Chicago in November, but Mr. Walton's attorney did not ask that Miss Henie be made a co-defendant until last Thursday.

Last week a copyright infringement suit was filed in federal court in South Bend, Ind., by Bernard Huff and Forest O. Bobitt against Bing Crosby, Paramount Publix Corporation and W. C. Kolhurst, operator of the Fairy, Napanee, and Saintly-Joy Select. The plaintiffs claim infringement of the song "I've Got a Pocketful of Dreams" in "Sing You Sinners."

With action still pending on a charge of unfair competition, the copyright infringement case brought by Dolores Lacy Collins against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, Loew's, Inc., and Culver Export Co. with reference to the film "Test Pilot", has been dismissed by the court. Last week the application made by J. Robert Rubin for a $5,000 attorney's fee to be assessed against Mrs. Collins as the administratix of the estate of Jimmy Collins, was denied by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe, whose decision, however, allowed a renewal of the application on the completion of the case.

New Pathe Plan Is Due January 15th

The new plan for liquidation of Pathe Film Corporation is expected by company officials to be completed shortly after January 15th. It is understood the proposal will represent a substantial change from the original plan, which was rejected at a special stockholders' meeting December 13th.

DECISION DUE ON USE OF "MECHANICAL" MUSIC

"Opera - On - Tour" Seeks Injunction to Bar Interference by Two Unions

The outcome of the battle by the International Alliance of Stage Employees and the American Federation of Musicians, to prevent the functioning of "Opera-On-Tour," Inc., a project using recorded music, living singers and stagehands in film houses this week awaited the decision of Kenneth O'Brien, New York supreme court justice, on the opera company's application for an injunction to restrain the two unions from "interfering" with the company's performances. Testimony was concluded two weeks ago, and briefs filed last week, whereupon Judge O'Brien reserved decision.

The "opera" company's brief, in part, claims that, "while unions may combine and act in concert for certain legitimate and well recognized purposes, even though in so doing they injure the business of another, they may not use the economic force of their numbers, or, in other words, they may not combine and act in concert for any and all purposes. . . . The prevention of the use of mechanical devices is not, we submit, a legitimate end, no matter how peaceful the means used. . . .

"We assert that the plaintiff has a right to produce opera without the use of orchestral musicians in the same way that a newspaper has the right to publish without the use of hand presses, in the same way that the telephone company has the right to install dial telephones, and in the same way that the city of New York has the right to remove snow mechanically instead of with manual labor. . . .

"When unions act to interfere with and destroy business simply because industry utilizes labor-saving devices, and on the sole ground that the devices do save labor, their objective is unlawful."

Deprived of Jobs, Is Charge

The brief filed by attorney for the two unions claims that the use of mechanical music deprives musicians of employment opportunities, "with the danger if permitted to spread to other stage productions, of destroying musicians' employment opportunities entirely in theatres. . . ."

The musicians are cited in this brief as having lost employment drastically during the past years, "due to the inroads made by radio and recorded music. . . .

"The individual local unions have been obliged to give their members unemployment relief," the brief continues, "Some of them distribute food baskets to their needy. Fifteen to twenty or thirty musicians have been able to furnish the whole country with music. Records made by an orchestra in one week, are so continually used and so many pressings repeated, that the same orchestra remains unemployed for a year or two thereafter. This has led to the virtual elimination of conservatories of music and may result in the loss of the entire art of music for the lack of any incentive on the part of musical students."

Calls Complaint Insufficient

The brief of the unions also claims that the opera company's complaint is insufficient; that there is no unlawfulness involved; that refusal of stagehands to work for the opera company was voluntary, not the result of coercion; that the opera company's expansion is a threat and a precedent.

The Opera company started on a tour of Southern cities in August. Its use of recorded music aroused the opposition of the AFM, which asked the help of the IATSE. The latter union ordered its stagehands not to work for the company, the order taking effect at a performance in Birmingham, Alabama, stranding the company, which then asked for the injunction.

During the trial Mrs. Harold M. Lehman, niece by marriage of the New York state governor, and a treasurer of the company, testified that she thought small towns throughout the country, which could not hear opera in any other way, would be benefited by the opera company.

Frederick W. Birnbach, secretary of the AFM, testified that the use of recorded orchestras in presentation of operas would mark "the beginning of the end" for musicians, and that, if the AFM permitted the growth of the practice, "we might as well quit—we might as well let our men starve."

Famous Players Voting Trust to End March 6th

The voting trust agreement of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, instituted almost 10 years ago, is due to expire March 6, 1939, when the voting trust certificates will be replaced by common shares with full voting power for their respective holders.

Announcement was made in Toronto that 189,000 shares have been under the jurisdiction of the agreement, the trustees of which are N. L. Nathanson, president; I. W. Killam of Montreal, and Adolph Zukor.

In view of the 189,000 shares controlled by management interests, it is likely that no change of control will occur when the trustee agreement expires, although the public probably will begin to have a greater voice as stockholders of the company.

According to the latest balance sheet of the company, 408,524 of the authorized 600,000 common shares of the company have been issued and are fully paid while Mr. Nathanson is expected to take up an option on January 15th for 11,000 more shares from the treasury at $13.75 per share, his last purchase of a similar block under option in 1937 being $13 per share. A further 33,000 shares are under option to the company president at prices ranging from $14 to $17 per share.

The balance sheet of Famous Players Canadian Corporation shows assets of $16,214,954, of which $10,969,856 are fixed assets at cost, including land, theatres, buildings, improvements and sound equipment less reserves for depreciation. Other assets include cash, call loans, Government bonds, accounts receivable, investments in and advances to subsidiary companies, franchises and leaseholds.

The earned surplus at January 1, 1938, was $2,716,717 and this should be increased at the close of the fiscal year just ending, because the company has paid a bonus to both common shareholders and employees for 1938. Liabilities and capital on January 1, 1938 totaled $13,498,237, of which bonds totaled $7,050,000 and stock $4,118,240.

Although Mr. Nathanson is a trustee of the 189,000 shares, Mr. Zukor is not a director of the Canadian company and his official connection with the company comes to an end with the termination of the trust agreement. However, there is a possibility that he may be elected to the board of directors at the annual meeting to be held in the near future.

The directorate consists of Barney Balaban, Major A. P. Holt, Sir Herbert Holt, W. D. Ross, A. E. Dyment, F. B. McCurdy, Y. Frank Freeman, Thomas J. Bragg and R. W. Bolstad. The last two are active officials at the Toronto home office as secretary-treasurer and comptroller, respectively. The affairs of the company are directed by an executive committee comprising J. J. Fitzgibbons, vice-president and a director, Mr. Bragg and Mr. Bolstad; Clarence M. Robson, eastern division supervisor of theatres, and Ben Geldsaler, chief booker.

Famous Players Canadian Corporation was incorporated 20 years ago when Mr. Nathanson secured the Famous Players Lasky franchise for Canada. Mr. Nathanson being managing director of the company. He was out of the company some years ago when he resigned in protest over the control of the circuit, but returned as president about six years ago.

Two New Film-Radio Programs Starting

Jesse L. Lasky's new radio program, "Gateway to Hollywood," will be presented for the first time Sunday over the Columbia Broadcasting System network. A half-hour program starting at 6:30 p.m., EST., it will, under the direction of Mr. Lasky, conduct a nation-wide search for screen talent. Following elimination programs the young man and woman selected will be featured in an RKO Radio picture.

Talent for the inaugural Screen Actors Guild program, starting Sunday over the CBS network, includes Joan Crawford, Jack Benny, Judy Garland, Reginald Gardner. Mitchell Leisen will direct the inaugural program, and Morrie Ryskind is serving as consulting writer. Ralph Morgan will explain the purpose of the series.

Two British Companies Formed; U. S. Tieups Sought

The formation of two new British companies was announced in New York this week by Harry Curry. The companies are Victor Film Distributors, Ltd., production company, and Provincial Picture Productions, Ltd., distributing organization, of which Mr. Curry is the managing director. He said branches have been established in important United Kingdom cities and that a deal is being negotiated with J. H. Hoffberg to handle distribution of the product here.

Victor will make about six pictures in 1939 with a possibility that this figure will be increased in 1940, Mr. Curry said.

Mr. Curry also said that he had completed deals for the United Kingdom and Australasian rights to 18 new pictures either completed or being produced by Monogram and a number of independents. He sailed Friday on the Samaria for London.

The Port of New York Authority announced this week that a one-reel documentary film, "Millions for Safety," photographed within the Holland and Lincoln Tunnels, atop the towers of the George Washington Bridge, and inside ventilation buildings, has been completed.

Federal Court Approves RKO Reorganization

Federal Judge William Bondy in New York Wednesday handed down a written decision in which he approved the proposed plan of reorganization of RKO with certain modifications which he outlined in his opinion. The decision said that all parties who heretofore have consented to the proposed plan would be allowed an opportunity to withdraw their acceptances if they opposed the modification. If there then were sufficient acceptances filed, Judge Bondy said, he would confirm the plan as modified.

Paragraph XI, subdivision E, of the plan, under the decision, will be modified so that while any new preferred stock remains outstanding no funded debt in excess of $3,000,000 or any other obligation referred to in that section can be incurred over the objection of one-third of the preferred stockholders. The plan also will be modified to provide for issuance to those debenture holders who elect to receive only preferred stock of 1.3 shares of preferred for each $100 in principal amount of debentures. The new preferred stock according to the modified plan, will be entitled to a first quarterly dividend of $1.50 a share.

Contingent claimants under the proposed modifications will receive, when their claims mature, either common stock of the debtor equivalent to the amount of their claims and evaluated as of the time of promulgation of the plan, or at the option of RKO its equivalent in cash. The final modification provided for by Judge Bondy will require that any underwriting agreement for the flotation of new common stock must be first approved by the court.

Judge Bondy said that in his opinion the treatment of the stockholders was "fair and equitable," especially, he said in view of the new proposed arrangement with Rockefeller Center, Inc., under which it is to be allocated 415,000 shares of common. This arrangement with the Center, the court said, was greatly to the advantage of the estate.

Under the reorganization plan the old common stock will receive one-sixth of a share of new common, plus a warrant to subscribe to one new share at $15 a share, good for 10 years, or at the holder's option to subscribe to a half share of new common at a price of $10 per full share, good for five years. The debentures will receive for each $100 of principal, one share of six per cent preferred, convertible into eight shares of common, plus five shares of common, or at the election of the debenture holder, $140 in new preferred and no common.

The new capital structure, if all debenture holders elect to take preferred and common stock rather than a larger amount of preferred, will consist of about $12,718,000 six per cent convertible preferred, requiring annual dividend payments of about $763,000 and 2,364,428 shares of common stock, besides the warrants.

KAO Outstanding Shares

Its chief theatre operating subsidiary, Keith-Albee-Orpheum, has outstanding 64,304 shares of $100 par seven per cent preferred and 1,206,381 shares of common. RKO owns all except a few of the common shares and about 22,000 shares of the preferred. M. J. Meehan owns about 25,000 shares of the preferred, and the remainder is held by the public. Accrued back dividends amount to $19.25 a share, or about $840,000 on shares not owned by RKO, having been reduced from $29.75 a share by payments over the past several years. Current dividends are being paid.

RKO will come out of receivership in a strong cash position, The Wall Street Journal said this week. At the close of 1937 the subsidiary company Radio Pictures had a very small cash balance and owed money to the banks. Now through liquidation of inventories it has about $2,000,000 on hand.

FROM READERS

TIMELY, OUTSPOKEN, SAYS BUDD ROGERS

Dear Mr. Quigley:—

It was with a great deal of interest that I read your editorial, published in the December 17th issue of the Motion Picture Herald, headed "What the Industry Faces in 1939." As a matter of fact I was so impressed with the article that I read it three times.

I have yet to read a more outspoken, candid reaction to our industry than the thoughts expressed by yourself. They are timely, to the point and I believe should be taken and carefully analyzed to the fullest extent by everyone connected with the motion picture business, and it is my humble belief that the industry can be greatly improved if your statements are carefully analyzed by the members of this group. More power and good luck to you!—Budd Rogers, Alliance Films Corporation, Rockefeller Center, New York.

DISAGREES WITH COURT DECISION

To the Editor of the Herald

It seems to me that things are tough enough as they are in the business without theatre managements actually alienating patronage away from their theatres. Courteous, honest and equitable handling of all controversial matters makes for the theatre far-sighted enough to adhere to such a policy myriads of friends and loyal patrons.

Although I have never engaged in either the study or practice of the law, applied logic and common sense would seem to indicate that the judge was wrong in his ruling in connection with Zvirin vs. Roxy Theatre, Inc., as reported in the Herald last week (December 31st issue)

Here was a mother, father and daughter who, in order to take advantage of a bargain price as advertised, arrived at the Roxy Theatre forty-five minutes before the price change. Certainly it was not their fault that the box-office was shut in their faces for one reason or another.

This could have been handled in either of two ways. The party could have been sold tickets at the advertised price and been permitted to wait in the lobby along with all those others who were rightfully entitled to the 25c price if they had arrived at the theatre before 1 p.m. In the event that a lobby holdout was already in effect, the management could have placed an usher at the end of the line at 1 o'clock. All those ahead of the usher should have been admitted for 25c, inasmuch as they had reached the theatre before 1 p. m., and all those who came after the usher would be admitted at the increased price, inasmuch as they had come to the theatre after 1 p. m.

Now, in this instance, only one party of all those in line was so "burned up" about the incident that they took the matter to court. Don't you suppose the others who were entitled to a lower price but were forced to pay the higher were just as "burned up?"

The ruling in this particular case also implied that an exhibitor could advertise a lower price and then, later, change his mind. Applying this reasoning to the commercial world, I'm sure that every one of us would kick like hell 'til the cows came home if we presented ourselves at a department store to purchase shirts advertised at $1.95 and was told by the clerk that the management had changed its mind and that the shirts were now selling at a higher price.

The Roxy theatre situation is only one angle; I venture to say that almost every theatre can take stock of its relations with its patrons and find much, much room for improvement.—Joseph G. Ehrlich, 56 Ashton St., Dorchester, Mass.

Japanese Color Process Reported

Employing what is described as a new process of "a single emulsion rather than multiple layers," Professor Toshisuke Oka, of the Tokyo Higher Industrial Arts School, has completed a natural color motion picture process, reports the Tokyo office of the American Commercial Attache.

The new film is said to enjoy an advantage in Japan over others "because it can be used on ordinary projectors, which fail to reproduce foreign color films clearly after they have been used a number of times." It is explained that Professor Oka employs ordinary positive film and then in printing combines three images in blue, red and yellow.

The U. S. attache added that the new process is expected to advance Japan's position in color film research, which up to now has lagged far behind that in this country.

This report, obviously written by a layman, appears to be tinged with more nationalism than technology. The making of multiple, color-separation, images by fractional treatments of a single emulsion on ordinary positive stock, was achieved in the United States more than a decade ago by the late William A. Van Doren Kelley, inventor of the Prizma process. The single emulsion method produces pleasant results on a limited scale, with considerable manipulative difficulty. Its possibilities were explored long ago, and generally abandoned as inadequate in terms of quality by our standards.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Low Tide

In the week between Christmas and New Year's Day, Hollywood could get around to starting only five productions. In the same period nine pictures were marked off the active shooting list.

At Paramount, where enthusiasm is running high that 1939 will prove a banner film making year, two projects were sent on their way. The more pretentious is "Man About Town," a topical comedy for which music, dancing and spectacular settings will prove the production effects. It will feature Jack Benny, Dorothy Lamour, Edward Arnold and Eddie Anderson. The companion piece, "Grand Jury Secrets," melodrama and romance in a setting of legal chicanery, political graft and underworld menace, will present Gail Patrick, John Howard, Harvey Stephens, Elizabeth Patterson, William Frawley and Kitty Kelly.

Columbia started "Blondie Steps Out," second in the series of domestic comedies based on the Chick Young cartoon. Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake and little Larry Simms again will be seen in the roles they created. The supporting cast will include Jonathan Hale, Dorothy Moore, Linda Winters and Don Bedoe.

Further to appease the appetites of patrons who like shock and terror in their entertainment, a box office receipt reservoir that was retapped by the reissues of Universal's "Frankenstein" and "Dracula" and which the just-finished "Son of Frankenstein" also will accommodate, Twentieth Century-Fox started "The Hound of the Baskervilles." One of Conan Doyle's best known Sherlock Holmes stories, the picture will feature Basil Rathbone, Nigel Bruce, Richard Greene, Anita Louise, John Carradine, E. E. Clive and Ralph Forbes.

Republic's contribution to the new work is "White Fury," an action romance melodrama in which will be seen Beverly Roberts, Horace MacMahon, Ben Weldon, Clarence Kolb and John Harman.

Completed Productions

Paramount and Republic each completed two productions. Pictures that soon will be carrying the "It's the best show in town" label are "Me and My Gal" and "Heritage of the Desert." Buck Jones and Helen Twelvetrees are the principals in the first, which also will present Donald O'Connor, Dorothy Howe, Grant Withers, Robert Armstrong, John Hartley, Ed Pawley, Sidney Blackmer and Philip Warren. The second, a Harry Sherman production, will feature Donald Woods, Evelyn Venable, Harvey Stephens, Robert Barrat, C. Henry Gordon, Sidney Toler, Russell Hayden, Paul Guilfoyle, Paul Fix, Willard Robertson and Reginald Barlowe.

Additions to the sample cases which James R. Grainger's salesmen carry around are as opposite as the poles in entertainment character. In "Dr. Judith Randall," an emotion-stirring story of a woman physician's ambitions and sacrifices, Frieda Inescort will be starred. The small supporting company will feature Henry Wilcoxon, Claire Dodd, Sybil Jason and Spencer Charters. The first 1939 release for Gene Autry, again the leading western star, is "Ridin' the Range." He will have the company of Smiley Burnette, June Storey, George Cleveland, Jack Mulhall, Walter Miller, Gordon Hart, Ethan Laidlaw, Jack Ingram, Earl Hodgins and Hal Price.

72 FILMS WILL START IN NEXT TWO MONTHS

Exhibitors sometimes think that Hollywood has gone to pot when production activity does not take on the continuing aspect of an old fashioned fourth of July, with picture making sky rockets filling the sky, sparklers flashing everywhere, giant cannon crackers detonating all over the landscape. That's a false impression.

The comparative calmness that has reigned the last week or two will soon give way to a picture-making pyrotechnic exhibition of impressive proportions.

Whether they are productions that "have been in preparation for two-three, or four years," or ones just thought up on the spur of the moment, 72 pictures are slated to go before the cameras during January and February.

A recapitulation of tentative plans (all plans are always tentative in Hollywood) shows that Twentieth Century-Fox has earmarked nine stories for production; so have Paramount and Warner Bros. Republic plans to shoot eight shows soon, Monogram seven and MGM six. Attention will be devoted to six productions at Universal this month. Columbia and RKO-Radio will have four companies engaged on stages and on location. The United Artists group is definitely committed to three pictures, one of which is "Gone with the Wind," which certainly has been in preparation for a long, long time.

Two production associates completed pictures for the United Artists program. "It's Spring Again," Hal Roach, will team Harry Langdon with Oliver Hardy, to share the lead roles with June Lang, Alice Brady, Billie Burke, Jean Parker, James Ellison and Stepin Fetchit. The Edward Small item is "King of the Turf," in which youthful Roger Daniel will be featured with Adolphe Menjou. The supporting principals are Dolores Costello, Walter Abel, Alan Dinehart, William Demarest, Harold Huber, George McKay, Lee Moore, Oscar O'Shea and Cliff Nazarro.

Others Finished

"Professor Steps Out" was finished at Warners. A comedy romance with jitterbug dancing and music as well as a classical piece or two, it will present Dick Powell, Gale Page, Ronald Reagan, Ann Sheridan, Helen Broderick, Allen Jenkins, Zasu Pitts, Vera Lewis, Jerry Colonna, Maxie Rosenbloom, Elisabeth Dunne, Halliwell Hobbes, William Davidson, Granville Bates, Hobart Cavanaugh and Grady Sutton.

The top line players in Columbia's "First Offenders," romance and melodrama presented against a thrill action background, are Iris Meredith, Beverly Roberts, Johnny Downs, Walter Abel, Robert Sterling and John Tyrrell.

"Love Affair," first picture which Leo McCarey has delivered to RKO-Radio under his new producer-director contract, will present Charles Boyer, Irene Dunne, Lee Bowman, Maurice Moscovitch and Maria Ouspenskaya.

As Time Passes

Out on the Universal studio backlot where they are making "Code of the Streets," a set duplicating one of New York's teeming East Side or Bowery streets has been built. On the wall of one of the buildings is pasted a fading yellow poster advertising a show at the Palace theatre, once the citadel of vaudeville. The ace attractions offered are Kenneth Harlan, Bill Robinson, Brendel and Burt and Ken Murray.

Just a few steps from that sign stands a large booth, jam packed with penny candies, ice cream cones and other novelties. Standing in it, looking rather wistful, playing a bit character in a picture that will feature a lot of ragamuffin tough kids who probably never heard of him, was El Brendel.

Nelson Eddy stepped into a square yard of wet concrete in the forecourt of Grauman's Chinese theatre the other night and thus became the fiftieth notable to have his footprints preserved forever (or until it is torn up) in concrete.

There are oddities in the collection. In memory of "Sonny Boy," Al Jolson has left his knee prints. Sonja Henie's skate prints cut deep down into the cement. Most bizarre of all though is Joe E. Brown's mouth print.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Zaza

(Paramount)

On, Back, and Off-Stage Romance with Music

Here is entertainment. "Zaza" contains the time-distilled and imperishable essences of that unfailing sex triangle story which is to be had by compounding the conflicting components of love-and-duty. It has the alluring actress, the tempted husband, the dutiful wife, the adorable child. It has the fanfare, the glitter, the poignancy. It implies musk and illicit mad joy, mignonette respectability, sobriety, decency, and the devil, with brandy, champagne and music.

This piece, as filtered, re-distilled and rectified, with considerable syrup, by Hollywood, taking for base the original Pierre Berton-Charles Simon play of ever so long ago, has qualities inherent in such recordings all the way from "The Black Crook" to the output of Franz Lehar in the Vienna-that-was.

Production-wise and atmospherically, "Zaza" is an expedition into yesterday, but without serious year marks to invade its perennial theme and thematic interests.

It is almost certain that there will be a considerable criticism of this picture because it does have a touch of that album of memories quality. That will come from the tough-tender young critics who want all the pictures made about social economics and the viewpoint of Provincetown. The picture's basic appeal is about as old as sex pursuit, mother love, filial devotion and such dramatic reagents, which seem reasonably durable—and some of them freshly in bloom every day, so far.

The point is that the showmen can sell a seat to "Zaza" with reasonable assurance that the customer will have a good time.

That seems to be what pictures are made for, including this one. It is perhaps well to record that Miss Claudette Colbert shows all her good points and turns in a better performance under certain restraints than one might have expected. And then there will be maybe some surprise, and probably considerable pleasure, at the performance in which Bert Lahr plays amazingly "straight," subordinating his traditional technique to his rôle—thereby demonstrating with emphasis that whereas he has long been known as a comedian he is also an actor, and a very capable actor, too. This is likely to prove quite profitable to Mr. Lahr, or should. To some, too, will come a special satisfaction in observing Herbert Marshall substantially ignoring opportunity for the obvious, and winning by a shyly emphatic understatement in his role, the husband and victim of lures and circumstance.

Memory will not serve you about the plot. This time "Zaza" and her new love come to parting, and if there's a "happy ending" for her it's because she's a super-woman with a super-conscience. Sin is not rewarded, permanently, this time. The curtain falls with all where they belong according to convention, with the decision left to the audience, which will not be sure about the answer. That ought to be satisfactory.

The musical components of the show are pleasant, contributing importantly to the flow. The best number is a ballad, "Hello Darling," which is woven into the slight if intense tale in a manner calculated to give it about all the plot responsibility that a ballad can carry—maybe an ounce or two more.

So much for the showman's concern about "Zaza" as a piece of boxoffice merchandise about to go on sale. There are, however, some other considerations, important if not so immediate.

"Zaza" is just now emerging under seal of approval after a highly troubled and costly career between the stages and the cutting rooms on Marathon avenue. It is said to have cost somewhere in the region of a million and a half. It would be a safe guess that a husky fraction of that is still on the cutting room floor, in such items, for instance, as about a quarter of a million dollars worth of can-can dance that couldn't be put in the film can—for social reasons.

The picture, according to the Hollywood talk of early in '38, was to be a high mark in the new production career of Adolph Zukor. There were those in Paramount who did not care for the notion. It is said that they found William LeBaron supporting the protest with vigour. Now Mr. Zukor has gone off to Europe on other errands. Mr. LeBaron is in charge. That would appear to leave, on the issues of "Zaza," production in something like statu quo ante.

It would appear that a lot of trouble, footage, payroll and other taxes on the industry would have been saved if 1938 cinema production had started with a realization that the Olga Nethersole "Zaza" of the dim long ago pertained to another art, another and much smaller audience, in another day and time, being the "Great White Way" and its slight road-show extensions, not the world of the all pervading motion picture of today.

That, to be sure, would have made it just as well to start with a new story, since the box office value of "Zaza" as a title is just what the sound of the zestful word may mean, with no carry-over from the yesterdays of Broadway, of the lobster palace era.

The "Zaza" project pertains to an order of concept in Hollywood that is founded more in the devotion to old theatre, rather than modern cinema.

Making "Zaza" into the entertainment that it really is, has been a deal of trouble, and reminiscent of that Irishman's knife that had two new blades and one new handle.

To be sure, Hollywood has done that before, and how it costs!

Stand Up and Fight

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Historical Melodrama

All but untouched by cinema literature, that period of American history preceding the Civil War during which the causes of it were a-building, is painted with a broad and sure brush on a vast canvas by Mr. Mervyn LeRoy in what is by commanding odds his best picture since joining Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Here is new material, vitally handled, and here is Wallace Beery at his very good best with a new and confident Robert Taylor alongside. This is, for these reasons and others, a picture showmen can sell to the first night audience and one that can sell itself from there on.

Mr. LeRoy could have made a great picture out of the slave-running trade alone. He could have made a great picture out of the competition (circa 1844) between the stage lines and the infant railroads, specifically the B. & O. But he chose to use both of these great subjects as construction materials in the making of a great picture about people, and he put all of the right people in all of the right places before he started grinding.

The screen play, by James M. Cain, Jane Murfin and Harvey Fergusson from a story by Forbes Parkhill, is a skillfully and delightfully wrought piece of material. It is full of plot twist as the first B. & O. roadbed was of bumps. It presents two strong characters in fundamental opposition, both picturesquely heroic and both possessed of vices and virtues in about equal and convincing measure. It offers exciting incident of unfamiliar kind and a great amount of vigorous action. It is a grand job.

Mr. LeRoy's presentation of this material is expensive, impressive and effective. Printed in sepia, the film contains many sequences that would be charming for eye value alone, but the strong direction of W. S. Van Dyke II leaves the picture dependent at no time on mere beauty. Some of Mr. Van Dyke's passages, particularly those having to do with the slave played by Clinton Rosemond, are among the year's finest demonstrations of cinema artistry.

Mr. Beery plays "Boss Staley" of a Maryland stagecoach line owned by "Susan Griffith" of Boston, played crisply by Florence Rice. In fierce commercial conflict with the oncoming railroad, "Staley" finds his profits where they are, notably in supplying wagons for the smuggling of slaves, as he believes, at the expense of sympathetic Northerners. Mr. Taylor plays "Blake Cantrell," gay but impoverished Southern gentlemen, who is forced into "Staley's" service and, on learning the nefarious nature of the slave trade being carried on, buys himself out of service with money provided by the railroad. Messrs. "Staley" and "Cantrell" engage in turn in terrific fights in the course of an involved but coherent and convincing chain of events which culminate satisfactorily for both men and for the women interested in them.

Impressive incidents are the races between stagecoach and train, brilliantly executed, the pursuit of an escaped slave, a gun battle in a snowfilled arroyo, a fox hunt at the start of the picture and the fights between Beery and Taylor. Impressive performances are turned in by all hands.

Whispering Enemies

(Columbia-Darmour)

Topical Melodrama

Here's a picture that is both all-audience entertainment and a showman's show. Fresh in theme and plot development, the original story by John Rawlins and Harold Tarshis, which Gordon Rigby and Tom Kilpatrick transcribed in screen play form, is convincing. Given better than average staging by producer Larry Darmour, and intelligently directed by Lewis D. Collins, the story holds to its point continually, wastes no time on inconsequentials, and moves with speed and precision.

Without resorting to artificial heroics, Jack Holt turns in a strong performance in the leading role and is given capable support by Dolores Costello, Addison Richards, Joseph Crehan, Donald Briggs, Pert Kelton and Paul Everton.

As the story is a topical melodrama, there is practically no comedy and, until the concluding sequences, no trace of romance. In substance, "Whispering Enemies" illustrates how vicious, business-wrecking whispering campaigns are started, how they work and how they accomplish their objective.

"Brewster," a cosmetic manufacturer, finds his business ruined by a whispering campaign inaugurated by "Harley" and "Bowman," employees of a rival manufacturer, "Laura Crandall." Thereupon "Brewster" and "Graham" go into the whispering campaign on a big scale. They drive "Crandall's" almost to bankruptcy and create havoc with many other enterprises, as their employees, scattered all over the country, spread malignant rumors. Using an alias, "Laura" gets a job with "Brewster," eventually becomes his private secretary, and learns how he wrecked her business. When she confronts him with this knowledge he informs her that her firm had wrecked his by similar methods. Subsequently "Brewster" confesses responsibility for starting a whispering campaign that culminated in rioting, and is jailed. Using his old whispering campaign tactics, he frustrates a prison break and is rewarded by parole. In the employ of "Miss Crandall," a whispering campaign indulged in by travel agencies and modistes lets him know that she is in love with him.

If ever there was a natural for a teaser campaign, "Whispering Enemies" is it. It is suggested that, if possible, the picture be seen before being presented to the public. From such an inspection any exhibitor should be able to concoct any number of exploitation tricks of potent interest-creating caliber.

Tough Kid

(Monogram)

Melodrama

"Tough Kid" may be exploited as a better than average prize fight picture. Making good use of the elements fundamental to a story of this character, the show also introduces several new ones. Thus, while the production contains a great deal of action, it also has a human interest content.

Fast moving, waiving all non-essentials, "Tough Kid" establishes its plot at once and develops it in an attention holding manner. "Red," always the idol of his younger brother, "Skipper," becomes a greater hero when he wins the right to meet the champion. "Skipper," however, fears that "Red's" new manager, "Grogan", is a crook, and knows definitely that association with gamblers "Monk" and "Regan" bodes the fighter no good. To get money for medical attention for his sweetheart, "Ruth," "Red" double crosses his manager and "Skipper" and agrees to throw the fight. Meanwhile, proving his belief that "Monk" and "Regan" have made "Ruth" their tool to get "Red" into their clutches, "Skipper" is kidnapped. Escaping, he arrives at the ring just in time to see "Red" take a "dive." When evidence of the crookedness is given, "Red" is exonerated, and though offered another chance at the champion, he retires for romance with "Ruth."

While not especially strong so far as name value goes, "Tough Kid" features Frankie Darro in an appealing characterization and gives Dick Purcell, Judith Allen, Lillian Elliott, Don Rowan, William Ruhl and Lew Kelly many opportunities to be effective in support. The show should prove attractive to the sporting contingents in audiences as well as those who like plenty of action on the screen.

They Made Me a Criminal

(Warner Bros.)

Melodrama of Regeneration

John Garfield of "Four Daughters" plays here a Cagney-like role, differently but very effectively, with the Dead End Kids and Ann Sheridan, May Robson, Claude Rains and many another competent Warner player in positive support. The picture is forthrightly melodramatic and startlingly realistic, a swift chronicle placing its punches where they accomplish best results, and pulling none of them. The picture opens in New York, cyclonically, moves to Arizona, where it slows a trifle to give the audience a breather, and closes in another burst of action.

The role assigned to Garfield is no walkthrough. He enters the story as a prizefighter with all the worst attributes of the profession, and sheds his vices grudgingly under pressure of circumstances and contacts, electing, finally, to discount, to himself, his ultimate sacrifice in behalf of unwillingly loved ones. There is no sugar-coating on the part and he plays it across the board, collecting handsomely.

The Dead End Kids come into the picture after it is well under way, playing East Side roughnecks under custody of a kindly matron operating a fruit ranch in the Arizona desert. They are perhaps more effective than less for the change of setting. The inter-play of their influence upon the fugitive fighter and his upon them is a fine specimen of narrative and performance.

Miss Sheridan is excellent as the girl in the case, and Miss Robson turns in her infallibly competent portrayal.

The screenplay by Sig Herzig from a novel by Bertram Millhauser and Beulah Marie Dix has to do with a boxer advised to flee from New York following a murder. Although he believes he is innocent, he knows he cannot prove it. Nor can he box, say his advisers, because his southpaw style will reveal his identity. He tramps to a desert ranch where he is taken in by former New Yorkers who, without knowing his identity, resolve to redeem him. When eviction faces his benefactors he enters the ring against a barnstorming pugilist as a means of earning needed money. A New York detective is on hand to arrest him, but decides, after learing all the circumstances, not to.

The picture is somewhat stronger in individual sequences than in total result, although it is by no means weak in any particular. The opening passages, having to do with the murder, are perhaps the most violently melodramatic recently filmed. At midpicture a threat of death

Hard riding and gunplay are predominant factors in this western, more of the old school than the western which emphasised singing and comedy. Here the familiar theme of the cowboy with a self-imposed mission is employed, to good effect.

The picture stars Jack Randall. The slight thread of romance concerns Dorothy Short. In support are several well known players of western caliber, including Warner Richmond, Walter Long, Charles King and Dennis Moore, all capable "bad men" here. Then there are Frank Vaconelli and Ed Cassidy, the "law abiders," and "Rusty," the horse.

"Jack" and his pal "Lopez" ride the "wild horse trail" in search of rustlers who murdered "Jack's" brother. "Jack" saves "Jean" from a henchman of "Travers," foreman of her father's ranch. "Travers," with the help of "Jean's" brother, "Pete," is stealing the Hall horses. "Jack" is hired as a ranch hand on the recommendation of "Jean." "Rosco," a rustler, offers to buy some horses from "Hall." He gets the horses and also the money when he shoots and robs "Hall." "Jack," through the marked money, traces the rustlers. Caught and bound, he escapes and in a gun dual in the main street of town kills both "Travers" and "Rosco."

The Classics

This cinematic transcription "inspired by the novel by Count Leo Tolstoy" and underscored with a "musical interpretation by Beethoven" is heavy in acting, leaden in script and direction.

As translated to the screen, the story seems to be adapted from the tabloids than from the immortal Tolstoy. English titles translating the French dialogue are couched in ponderous language with plentiful philosophic phrases concerning the vagaries of life and love and everything in between. Jean Yonnel plays the central role in the expansive style of Old World acting. Gaby Morley, Jacques Erwin, Pierre Renoir, Edmonde Guy and Annie Rozanne give little or no assistance in supporting roles.

Plot ingredients are compounded of classified Russian drama props and number one seduction, one suicide, two attempted murders, a couple of evenings portraying gay night life, an appealing child and the remark of the hero after a whirl of sin and sex that he has lost his youth. "Pozdnycheff," the Russian rake, betrays the wife of a friend and causes the husband to commit suicide. He does penance by marrying a good girl from his home town. Years elapse. He suspects his wife of carrying on with a visiting concert violinist. The husband attempts to do away with them but his aim is not good. Reconciliation follows.

Devil's Island

(Warner Bros.)

Melodrama

There have been many pictures with a background of French penal colonies. Recent events, such as the escape of Rene Belbenoit, libéré, the publication of his book, "Dry Guillotine," the announcement that France would send no more convicts to French Guiana, and the still more current rescinding of that plan, make Warners' "Devil's Island" timely for exploitation purposes. The French government, by the way, asked that changes be made by the studio in the original version of the film.

"Devil's Island" is a grim story of a doctor who aided a wounded, escaped prisoner in France, and was sentenced to Devil's Island for treason. Boris Karloff, as "Dr. Gaudet," gives a finely chiselled performance as the doctor caught in the web of circumstance. Nedda Harrigan, as the wife of the commander of the prison colony, and Adia Kusnetzoff, as the convict who was beheaded, are but two of the cameos created by the cast which also includes Rolla Gourvitch, Will Stanton, Edward Keane, Robert Warwick, Pedro de Cordoba, Tom Wilson, John Harmon, Richard Bond, Earl Gunn, Sidney Bracy, George Lloyd, Charles Richman, Stuart Holmes, Leonard Mudie, Egon Brecher, and Frank Reicher.

The direction by William Clemens stresses the hopelessness of the characters thrown into exile.

The adaptation by Kenneth Gamet and Don Ryan of the original story by Anthony Coldeway and Raymond L. Schrock emphasizes the grimness of the story, which Bryan Foy produced.

Sentenced to Devil's Island, "Dr. Gaudet," after undergoing tortures escapes with a number of comrades. Rescued when their gasoline has been exhausted, they are brought back to the island, to find that the records of the prison's director, stolen by an accomplice of the physician, had earned him a pardon by virtue of the revelations of the peculations of the prison's head.

Wanderers of the Desert

(United Artists)

Desert Royal Mounted

Strictly speaking, the title should be applied to the natives of the Arabian sand lot, the Bedouin tribes, and to a group of dusky and camel riding patrolmen who keep the Near East folk from feuding with each other and raiding passing caravans. Interesting shots detailing the living habits of both classes are detailed. Particularly striking are the sequences depicting the Bedouin camp life and especially the tribal method of making coffee. Night shots are outstanding.—Running time, one reel.

A Short Swing

Apparently, the reception and the results that greeted "Out Where the Stars Begin" have prompted the sponsors to spin another fabulous tale on the "little girl becomes screen sensation of the century" theme. In the second edition, the plot path is similar and familiar. Patterned ingredients include a cute hash slinger who is baked into a glamour girl recipe, a handsome hero with a capable pair of vocal chords, a director who has as much difficulty with his shooting schedule as he has with the manipulation of the king and queen's English, a decorative background of feminine scenery, a couple of lively tunes and some glowing color shadings. Rabid picture fans will derive a thrill or two in glimpsing some cinematic celebrities breaking bread in the studio commissary and exhibitors in general will be surprised to see R. J. (Bob) O'Donnell, general manager for Interstate Circuit and Texas Consolidated Theatres, who comes before the camera surrounded by a bevy of sight seeing Texan beauties. Katherine Kane, soon to be seen in "Swing, Sister, Swing," appears as the white hope of the industry. John Carroll is the handsome hero with Fitz Feld repeating his libel on the directorial personnel of Hollywood. —Running time, 20 minutes.

This is an interesting film about some of the buildings, people and Governmental functions in the nation's capital. There is the capitol itself, the subway used by Congressmen, the Lincoln Memorial, Supreme Court building, Bureau of Standards, the Treasury and the Washington Monument among others. Also shown is the Department of Justice and the training of its operatives. Running time, 10 minutes.

Don't Lose Sleep
Over the Question . . . .

CAN I AFFORD HIGH INTENSITY PROJECTION?

The answer is: YOU CANNOT AFFORD TO DO WITHOUT IT. That is what the managers of almost 6000 theaters have learned — more than one-third of the theaters in the country.

Simplified High Intensity projection costs so little more than low intensity that one more patron per show covers the added cost.

It puts your theater in line for successful competition with the largest houses.

It will receive the hearty approval of your patrons.

It shows every picture, whether black and white or color, to better advantage than low intensity projection.

It gives two to three times as much light on the screen as low intensity projection.

ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION TO PRESS PROJECT FOR EDUCATIONAL FILMS

Director Explains Plans for Furthering Visual Education and Developing Sources; Documentaries, Industrials Cited

Concluding that the motion picture "has no instructional and persuasive equal," and that "it is high time it were used for what it is so perfectly suited, not only for fictionized entertainment," the Rockefellers are determined to go ahead with plans to place motion pictures in the classrooms of the nation, and the motion picture industry is invited to participate.

The plan of procedure is as follows:

(1) Finding all institutions equipped to use motion pictures or interested in securing such equipment.

(2) Searching out all films with educational possibilities, evaluating them and compiling a basic list from the many existing sources.

(3) Making available to general education all desirable films heretofore unavailable.

(4) Determining the desirable subjects not now covered by films and advising producers and distributors so they may be provided.

(5) Keeping educators and film leaders informed up to the minute on all developments in the business of the classroom film, on the market, trends and tastes.

(6) Establishing regional, state and local film libraries to serve, through rental, those institutions unable or unwilling to set up their own libraries.

(7) Reducing prices of films and equipment for school use.

This latest explanation of the Rockefellers' long-nurtured ambition to bring about a widespread opening of motion pictures in schools was made by Fanning Hearon, former newspaperman and Government film producer and now executive director of the Association of School Film Libraries, which the Rockefellers started on an endowment in June of this year.

The Association's plans were touched on somewhat at the recent annual southern conference on Audio-Visual Education, at Atlanta, where Mr. Hearon cited the Rockefeller project as "a non-profit organization of educational institutions and noncommercial distributors of educational motion pictures, sponsored by the General Education Board, a Rockefeller foundation, and directed at cooperative encouragement of the use of the motion picture in education."

Aid to Industry, Is Claim

"The seven program points," Mr. Hearon, emphasized, "must not be interpreted as being directed against the producers and distributors; in fact they are directed at the improvement of their welfare. With a market which states precisely what it wants and how many, producers and distributors will find themselves in a much happier state than that of bewildering uncertainty which now exists. Makers and distributors of films and the equipment essential to their use should take a good look at the handwriting on the wall and warmly welcome a non-profit organization whose business is to improve their business."

The industry's producers and distributors some 18 months ago appeared to be seriously interested in "invading" the school field on their own, through a plan developed by, if not devised within, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, but to date it has not taken root. It was intended to place the film industry in production of new school films and adaptation of regular theatrical films that were out-of-theatre-release, besides setting up a nationwide exchange system for distribution on rental.

THE ROCKEFELLERS ON SCHOOL FILMS

"With sight, sound, motion and now color as its ingredients, the motion picture has no equal, yet it has not attained its deserved status among the educational media because the audience is unknown and unorganized; the product is unknown and inadequate; the market is unstable." This is the conclusion of the Association of School Film Libraries (Fanning Hearon, director), a Rockefeller endowment established to organize the field of classroom films.

The Rockefellers even contributed $50,000 to that project to pay for the preliminary explorations that were made into the vaults of MPPDA member companies to determine what old films might be suitable.

"Vagueness" Attacked

Mr. Hearon, of the Rockefellers, now charges that the "most chronic characteristic of most movements to do something about the use of films for instruction has been a discouraging vagueness. There has been a lot of talk about evaluating, opening new film sources and encouraging new production, with educators doing the brain work, but not much has been accomplished. Lack of accomplishment can be attributed to lack of organization. There has never been a gathering place for people with ideas and the energy to put them across. Now they can cast their lots with the Film Library Association and get something done. Individually they can not be heard, but speaking with "One Voice" they will be heard and progress will come of it."

Contending that very few really good educational films have been made by anyone anywhere, Mr. Hearon is especially concerned with securing 16 mm. releases of educationally valuable pictures heretofore tied up in film business, and in the production of new films expressly for non-theatrical exhibition. As examples of films from new sources he mentioned the shorts selected by the Mark May (MPPDA) group in the summer of 1937; the Progressive Education Association excerpts from features; foreign films such as the British instructionals and documentaries; the "selling" films of the "industrial and commercial concerns with grown-up conceptions of public relations"; and "the unusual products of some smaller independent producers," mentioning "Adventures of Chico."

Extending his remarks on the Mark May (MPPDA) selections, he quoted Dr. May to the effect that the schools may count on these shorts for use in the school year 1939-1940. Mr. Hearon said he and all persons connected with his Association are disappointed in the delay of the release of these subjects.

Going more into the films of "the industrial and commercial concerns with grown-up conceptions of public relations," Mr. Hearon declared, "The point being made is that business can accomplish its purpose and yet make important contributions to education, by simply turning off the ballyhoo and turning on the facts."

On the subject of new sources Mr. Hearon said the Association has been given the educational-use rights to the March of Time.

Mr. Hearon said that the Association had recently been consulted by "a major producer of theatrical short subjects" concerning the real requirements of the 16mm school films audience. This producer—E. W. Hammons and his Educational Pictures has been openly mentioned as interested in school films—asked the Association to poll members to ascertain which films would be most popular in the educational field.

Setting out to bringing schools, colleges and universities that use films into its membership, the Association within its first year expects to line up the 50 largest and most important users and non-commercial distributors of school films.

With headquarters at Nine Rockefeller Plaza, the Association now operates, under Mr. Hearon, with officers and a directorate constituted as follows: J. C. Wardlaw, president, University System of Georgia; Boyd B. Rakestraw, vice president, University of California; Harold C. Bauer, New Ulm, Minn., Public Schools; Thomas Fansler, New York University; Charles F. Hoban, Jr., American Council on Education; John A. Hollinger, Pittsburgh, Pa. Public Schools; and Paul C. Reed, Rochester, N. Y. Public Schools.

Two weeks ago at the Hotel Commodore in New York, the Public Education Association gave a dinner attended by approximately 800 people to mark the completion of the report of the Regent's Inquiry, an independent committee appointed to study the educational system of New York State, the chairman of which was Owen D. Young, chairman of the board of General Electric Company.

The general report, published under the title "Education for American Life," recommends that education "Make more extensive use of modern means of instruction, such as the radio, motion pictures, and other visual aids."

The Rockefeller Foundation contribution approximately $200,000 for research into the cultural side of radio in 1936 against a total of about $40,000 allocated for that purpose, according to the Foundation's 1937 report.

The beneficiaries were University Broadcasting Council, Chicago, $75,000 for developing educational and cultural programs; Princeton University School of International Affairs, $65,000 for a study of the value of radio to listeners; National Music League, New York, $15,000 for a study of Latin American broadcasts; World-Wide Broadcasting Foundation, Boston, operating shortwave station W1XAL, $25,500, to develop radio programs of educational and cultural value.

Chicago Schools Use 100,000 Reels

Chicago's public schools are among the largest users of films for educational purposes, it is reported by superintendent of public schools. Dr. William Johnson.

In addition to the great amount of film material, one and one quarter million colored stereopticon slides have been made available for use in the classrooms. Every elementary school is equipped with stereopticon lanterns, and 95 per cent have silent 16 mm. motion picture projectors as well; while the high schools enjoy the use of both silent and sound films, with a total of more than 100,000 reels of educational films circulated to all the public schools each year.

THE Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation is right proud of its influence on the progress of aviation. Its officers in Hollywood have finally succeeded in hi-jacking Doug (Wrong-Way) Corrigan into his first full suit of clothes.

Doug in all of his long-pants life, had never had a coat and vest to match, or any coat and vest for that matter, and when he walked into the RKO studio to start work in his "Flying Irishman" motion picture, he wore the same old trousers and sweater—until the movie moguls went to work on him. Doug now sports a full-fledged suit—cost $35.

"He undoubtedly went to see the main attraction and is determined to stick it out until successful," Brooks told the public.

Mr. Brooks elaborated on duals by observing: "This double feature idea has induced housewives to desert their husbands . . . reduced the normal vision to a bleary, indistinct sight . . . reduced the lungs of movie patrons to mere wisps of tubes and encouraged tuberculosis . . . and made men, women and children develop callouses . . ."

All the while personal and studio press agents were telling the world about the unusually homey Hollywood holidaying of their starring principals, headlines elsewhere in the press were describing the steller assemblage at the holiday opening of Earl Carroll's new $1,000-per-seat Hollywood cabaret.

It was a super-super-super premiere that Mr. Carroll held for his super-super-super Hollywood night club, but Mr. Carroll's electricians, stage hands and back-stage engineers nearly bounced the whole show right into the laps of the $1,000-per-seat customers who sat under the black patent leather ceiling from which dangled 10,000 neon lamps.

Miss Susan Miller, for one, was singing on one of the revolving stages that sets inside a second, when the platform on which she stood started to sink. Miss Susan kept right on singing, finally reappearing with a jolt from the hand of the stage engineer on a complicated switch.

Then came Reginald Craig, who, according to the United Press account, was nonplussed when the enormous curtains parted behind him and the two revolving stages started whirling in opposite directions.

JACK KUHNE, aviation editor of Truman Talley's Fox Movietone News and ace cameraman, and Al Simonson, his assistant, are back in New York from six months in the land of the midnight sun.

Their notes concerning the flora and fauna and natives of the Arctic and sub-Arctic regions would fill a large volume. Scientists appear to be much interested.

The purpose of their six-month expedition was to test newly developed raw stock in the unusual light conditions of the frozen circle as well, of course, to make films for the Fox newsreel. They report both efforts were successful.

From New York to Bergen to North Cape, 700 miles from the North Pole, their journey took them. Then, by 16 different coastal vessels to Hammerfest, Norway, where there is three months' light and nine months' total darkness. At Kantekaino they saw their first Laplander. Lapps call their mud-huts "gamas." A Swedish Lapp is a Lyngen. Kuhne and Simonsin lived with them, getting considerable footage of the natives, their migrations, customs and reindeer drives.

On Galdhopigden Mountain, 8,000 feet above sea level, and the tallest peak in Norway, Kuhne, attempting to negotiate a difficult shot of two guides jumping over a crevice while he was lowered into it, slipped on a treacherous, icy ledge. It was a close escape from death. Then a guide confided that his father and grandfather, guides before him, had met their fate in a similar fashion.

The cameramen found the Lapps friendly but no epicures. They had to be content with fish and potatoes three times a day. For a change and as a delicacy, they had reindeer meat.

Only nine days were found suitable for shooting due to the peculiar light which American raw stock has not yet been able to conquer. In the regions where light is present constantly, it is hazy, foggy. Special filters had to be used. The best time for shooting is at noon and early in the afternoon, although tests were made at various times of the "day," including midnight.

The trustees have not made up their collective mind as to whether they will loan the spike, and with Mr. DeMille wanting a golden spike when he wants it, he has been in communication with Nellie Taylor Ross, Director of the U. S. Mint, at Washington, who tells him, she'll see to it that he gets enough gold to make a "golden spike" of his own—for the little matter of $600.

AND now that the "Motion Pictures' Greatest Year" people have completed quizzing other people for the "Motion Pictures' Greatest Year" "Quiz," it seems to be in order to relate the researching experience of our good friend Allister Grossart, in Toronto.

A Toronto exhibitor acquaintance of Mr. Grossart was stumped by a patron who had never heard the word "quiz." She insisted on an explantion, so the exhibitor asked aid of Mr. Grossart. He, in turn did a bit of research. The result may suggest an angle to some exploitation of a century-and-a-half ago.

The word "quiz," discovered Grossart, was actually invented by a theatre manager—in the 1800's. His name was Richard Daly, also famed as an actor of the day, and who owned and managed the Smock Alley and Crow Street theatres in Dublin, Ireland—a veritable circuit owner.

Mr. Daly made a wager one day with a friend that he could invent a new word which would be on everybody's lips within a week. The conditions of the wager were that the word have no meaning and be derived from no known tongue. The morning after, Dublin awoke to find the word "quiz" written in chalk on the pavements, doors, windows and walls of the city. Mass psychology, of course, prevailed, and immediately the word was literally on everybody's lips, "and since that day," runs an old account, "should a strange story be attempted to be passed current, it draws forth the expression, 'You are quizzing me.' "

Maybe that's why Webster's Dictionary describes "Quiz," the noun, as "An odd or eccentric person or thing," "A hoax, a practical joke"; and describes "Quiz," the verb, as "To ridicule, to banter, to chaff or mock with pretended seriousness; to make sport of, as by obscure questions." In both insances, of course, there is the added meaning of examining.

COST vs. QUALITY ISSUE ARISES AGAIN IN ATTACKS ON NEW BRITISH QUOTA

Criticized by Producers Lacking Financial Nourishment, 8,000 on Unemployment Rolls, Exhibitors Facing Film Shortage

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Not since British film production grew up, certainly not since its legislators took it beneath their Parliamentary wing, has the industry spent so bleak and chill a holiday period as the one just passed.

Only six British films were in actual production. With the first nine months of the new Act past, the disturbingly small number of 82 films had been put forward for registration. This was at a rate of 100 a year. In the two previous years the total was in each case between 220 and 230.

With no visible improvement in conditions, producers lacking the requisite financial nourishment, employees, registered on the unemployment rolls to the tune of eight thousand or so, and exhibitors, confronted by the most serious film shortage in their history, are likely to challenge the whole basis and functioning of the new Films Act. The Films Council, appointed body for the hearing of grievances and the shaping of new formulae, is bound for a busy session.

Cost versus Quality

Not least likely on the prospects is a renewal of the old controversy, well badgered about during the new Act's parliamentary stages, of cost versus quality. Exhibitors already have spared no pains to put on record the fact that they foresaw precisely the present situation when a cost test was embodied in legislation instead of a quality test.

As far back as Midsummer 1936, spokesmen of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association warned not only the Government but their fellows in the industry, that if a cost test was embodied in the new act there would be an immediate drop in production figures.

So, too, were exhibitors keen and uncompromising critics of the multiple quota clauses of the Act, which they foresaw bringing about an even acuter shortage. In one of the latest of their pleas to Oliver Stanley they said: "We very much doubt if the American renters will be able to . . . produce a sufficient number of the expensive type of films which the Act now calls for. . . . We have this alternative apprehension that we may find ourselves short of films as our quota is not made conditional upon the American renters fulfilling their quota."

Calls Films Improved

Fully aware of the urgency and unable, even before a gullible House of Commons, to deny it, the Government, through its spokesman, Mr. Stanley, invokes the industry and the nation at large to take solace from improvement in the quality of British films. Peppered by Government critics with a series of allegations that the Act has not proved beneficial to the industry, that there is a serious shortage for exhibitors, and a higher unemployment figure, Mr. Oliver Stanley said:

"I do consider as satisfactory that the films now being produced are good films. The Act will have a satisfactory effect. I believe that the only sound basis for British films is good quality and I believe that there has been a very substantial advance in that."

Challenged on the thesis that the new Act had not attracted finance to the industry, Mr. Stanley stood his ground, claiming that the one thing to attract finance was that the industry should make better films and that there were signs that the quality of films had improved.

To this the exhibitors reply that the number of films of super quality has not increased, but probably has decreased. They admit that the major productions sponsored by Metro and Twentieth Century-Fox have reached a level hitherto rarely attained by British production, but point out that apart from one or two Denham productions following the quality level established there before the new Act, there remain probably but two independently produced pictures of a notably higher quality, "Pygmalion" and "Sixty Glorious Years."

Exhibitors naturally are not concerned whether increased quality has attracted or will attract finance to production; their immediate concern is the availability of adequate product.

Producers seem to be in confusion. The recent decision to continue the Federation of British Industries for three months instead of proceeding with the formation of the new body, is somewhat akin to their rapid change of position and platform during the quota processes, but critics interpret it as significant of the indecision and mercurial mindedness which long has marked British production. To a great extent their change of mind and heart probably is colored by the indifference of the American producers to the suggestion that they should ally themselves to the group. American producers, however, would need to be satisfied before they joined any such organization that not only was it representative, comprehensive and authoritative, but that it should give the assurance that its decisions would be abided by in all quarters. The present group does not include the Gaumont British, the Associated British or the Ealing groups. History has shown an indelicate tendency on the part of one or other of these to disagree on policy.

Americans' Problems

American producers here, meanwhile, are not without their problems, not the least of these being the fact that the new Act as interpreted by the Board of Trade calls upon them to sponsor in their quota schedules a certain number of lowest priced single quota films. The net effect of this is to compel them to make, or to have made for them, pictures of low cost and negligible quality or to have as single quota in their schedules pictures made on a double or higher quota basis.

The recent activity of the British Board of Film Censors and the Government in intervening on political grounds in the production of films offers another snag which producers and their renter sponsors here look upon with a jaundiced eye. The banning of the Lucknow project is a mere incident, it is true, but that is regarded as an incident of no small significance.

Refugee Benefit

Details have been completed for the stage and screen benefit shows for the Baldwin Refugee Fund on January 14. The Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, Kinematograph Renters Society, Actors' Equity, Theatrical Managers, Dramatists' League, Variety Artists' Federation, Musician's union and all other management and labor organizations have pledged 10 per cent of all earnings on that date.

Adolph Zukor has arranged that the proceeds of the opening of "Stolen Life," with Elisabeth Bergner, at the Plaza on January 18, will be devoted to the fund.

GLADIATOR, THE: Joe E. Brown, June Travis—Very good comedy feature. Unfortunately business was not so good. Played November 18-19.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LAW OF THE PLAINS: Charles Starrett—Average western to poor business. Played December 10.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

YOU CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU: Lionel Barrymore, Spring Byington, Jean Arthur, James Stewart—One of the grandest pictures to ever grace the screen. Entirely different from anything you have ever shown before. Wonderful cast. Step on this one and have a good time counting up after, providing you are not foolish enough to give it all back. Extended runs and grand for any spot.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

First National

AMAZING DR. CLITTERHOUSE, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Claire Trevor, Humphrey Bogart, Allen Jenkins—Excellent picture. Edward G. Robinson at his best. If you haven't already played this picture, play it now. It's tops in its line. We sure are looking for another one from you, Ed, and in the meantime orchids to you for your swell performance in "The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse." Running time, 87 minutes. Played December 13-14.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

BROTHER RAT: Wayne Morris, Priscilla Lane, Jane Bryan—Another swell show from Vitagraph that seems to go over in a large way. All that saw it seemed to be pleased. Priscilla Lane is one of the best drawng cards we have here and it seems like Wayne Morris fits good in with her. The military pictures seem to go good. Running time, 89 minutes. Played December 1-2.—Paul T. Mitchell, Mitchell Theatre, Barbourville, Ky. Small town patronage.

FOUR DAUGHTERS: Lane Sisters, Gale Page, Jeffrey Lynn, Claude Rains, John Garfield—This is a fine picture which failed to draw even average business, probably because I played it just before Christmas. Played December 21-22.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

GARDEN OF THE MOON: Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay, John Payne, Johnnie Davis—A surprise package from Warners that proved 100 per cent in entertainment value. Business normal. Introduces a new personality, John Payne, who is headed for stardom.—Sam Schiwetz, Rialto Theatre, Three Rivers, Texas. Small town patronage.

SECRETS OF AN ACTRESS: Kay Francis, George Brent—With as bad a picture as this proved to be, it's certainly no secret why Kay Francis is dead at our box office. This story is so dull and uninspired that it will bore your audience to distraction. So many walked out on it we blushed in shame, and why, may we ask, are there exhibitors and reviewers who could possibly have said this picture was okay? We're of the opinion they failed us miserably in reporting on this one. It's awful. Played November 26.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box-office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

CITADEL, THE: Robert Donat, Rosalind Russell—This was a fine big picture but it did only average business. It was made in England but the English actors were hard to understand. Running time, 110 minutes. Played December 18.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

OUT WEST WITH THE HARDYS: Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Cecilia Parker, Fay Holden—Good. Entertained all, but I still cannot see this series for extended runs. Grand, good, B-product.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

SHINING HOUR, THE: Joan Crawford, Margaret Sullavan, Robert Young, Melvyn Douglas, Fay Bainter—An outstanding picture that will do above the average business. Robert Young and Margaret Sullavan turn in splendid performances, as do the other stars. Plug it.—Sam Schiwetz, Rialto Theatre, Three Rivers, Texas. Small town patronage.

STABLEMATES: Wallace Beery, Mickey Rooney—Again the number one company comes through with a swell picture. Plenty of thrills and throbs for the most rabid of movie fans. A swell show that should mean box office for all theatres. This pair cannot be beat for pulling them in the house. Running time, 90 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

STABLEMATES: Wallace Beery, Mickey Rooney—Nothing big but the kind of entertainment the public wants. Mickey Rooney swell. Wallace Beery as natural as ever. A good bet for your best days. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 22-23.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

THREE LOVES HAS NANCY: Robert Montgomery, Janet Gaynor, Franchot Tone—Swell for the younger set. The older folks may thing it a little silly. This as a whole on audience reaction went over swell. Plenty of laughs. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 18.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

THREE LOVES HAS NANCY: Janet Gaynor, Robert Montgomery, Franchot Tone—This has quite a lot of good comedy tied together rather loosely by something supposed to be a plot. I guess that is normal for this sort of entertainment and, as the cast made the best of what it had to work on, the result is not half bad, and I believe our patrons were entirely satisfied with what they received. Running time, 69 minutes. Played December 10-11.—Dr. G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

Paramount

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Ann Gillis, Robert Kent, June Travis—While not a big picture, this one pleased the children and the Friday-Saturday trade. Has plenty of action and some good fights. Played December 23-24.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SAY IT IN FRENCH: Olympe Bradna, Ray Milland—Here is one of the cutest pictures you have ever played. Stand alone in any spot and a humdinger all the way. The producer almost spoiled this picture allowing Ray Milland to continue through two reels with his hat pulled down over one eye, but after he got away from this hat mistake he did a wonderful job. Go after it, for McPhee knows.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

SING, YOU SINNERS: Bing Crosby, Fred MacMurray, Donald O'Connor, Ellen Drew, Elizabeth Patterson—An excellent evening's entertainment. Only a fair grosser, however. Should have done much better to justify top allocation. Consequently, it became a disappointment. Played November 20-21.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SPAWN OF THE NORTH: George Raft, Henry Fonda, Dorothy Lamour, Akim Tamiroff, John Barrymore, Lynne Overman, Louise Platt—A very good picture. A very good plot. A very good cast. A very good business. A very good producer. Running time, 111 minutes. Played December 11.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

STOLEN HEAVEN: Gene Raymond, Olympe Bradna, Lewis Stone, Glenda Farrell—An agreeable surprise. This picture pleased generally and received much praise from music lovers. It is different from most and is quite good. Miss Bradna was favorably received by our patrons. Played November 23.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TOUCHDOWN ARMY: Mary Carlisle, John Howard—A third rate picture with third rate stars doing third rate business. The story has been told for years. Business poor.—Sam Schiwetz, Rilato Theatre, Three Rivers, Texas. Small town patronage.

WAIKIKI WEDDING: Bing Crosby, Shirley Ross, Martha Raye, Bob Burns—A satisfactory repeat run. Played November 29.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Republic

ARMY GIRL: Madge Evans, Preston Foster, Neil Hamilton, Ruth Donnelly—A credit to Republic but not to our box office. Business below normal. No draw with added attraction. Running time, 88 minutes. Played December 19.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

GUN LORDS OF STIRRUP BASIN: Bob Steele, Louise Stanley—A fair western. Bob pulls the western fans. Running time, 52 minutes. Played December 10.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

GUNSMOKE RANGE: Three Mesquiteers (Bob Livingston, Ray Corrigan, Max Terhune)—The Mesquiteers are a good bet and this is no exception. Will please the western fans. Running time, 54 minutes. Played December 17.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

MAN FROM MUSIC MOUNTAIN: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Carol Hughes—A great Saturday picture that stood them in the aisles. Business almost double average Saturday. Smiley Burnett turns in his most comical performance. In the future am going to play all Autry's on Tuesday-Wednesday dates. Just let your patrons know Autry is going to play and they'll do the rest. Don't forget, fellows, this is the kind of picture that makes the cashier think she's playing a piano instead of punching a ticket machine.—Sam Schiwetz, Rialto Theatre, Three Rivers, Texas. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

CAREFREE: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—Excellent, to by far the poorest business we ever had for an Astaire-Rogers feature. Our business has been decidedly off for the past month in spite of above the average showing. Christmas spending and some bad weather are responsible for some of these drops in receipts. Played December 14-15.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

FORTY NAUGHTY GIRLS: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—A late pickup that proved mildly interesting. Failed to arouse much response at the box office. Played November 18-19.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

I'M FROM THE CITY: Joe Penner, Kay Sutton—The usual Joe Penner picture. Foolish, yet enjoyed by some. If you've played any of this pictures you know what to expect. Running time, 66 minutes. Played December 17.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

LAW OF THE UNDERWORLD: Chester Morris, Anne Shirley—A fairly good co-feature picture. Don't depend too much upon it. Running time, 61 minutes. Played December 11.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

MOTHER CAREY'S CHICKENS: Anne Shirley, Ruby Keeler—A good clean dramatic comedy which is, in our opinion, one of RKO's best efforts for the past year. It is definitely a family picture. Running time, 82 minutes. Played November 26-27.—Dr G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

PAINTED DESERT: George O'Brien—This is a better than average western and, as such, will satisfy western fans very well. Running time, 59 minutes. Played December 17-18.—Dr. G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valleye Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

State Rights

SONGS AND BULLETS: Fred Scott—A cowboy picture of the usual caliber. Running time, 56 minutes. Played December 17.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

ALEXANDER'S RAGTIME BAND: Tyrone Power, Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Ethel Merman, Jack Haley—The boys claimed they sat through the shortest 105 minutes in the history of motion pictures when they reviewed this, a musical which rates second to none. It has everything—had to have—to please here 100 per cent. Several members of our audience have a real dislike for "musicals," but when they came out smiling on Saturday, well, there is but one reason for it. Berlin took them into camp with those swell numbers of yesterday and today. Alice Faye, who already has a rating of 101 per cent here, played her part to perfection. Her comedown from the hard hearted barroom songstress with a flair for the Mae West in clothes to the sweet—the way we like to see her—sensitive and lovable Stella Kirby was done in grand fashion. Tyrone "The Powerful" was excellent as Alexander and continues to prove to the public that he is one actor who cannot and will not be "typed." As usual, Jack Haley provided much in the way of comedy and we regret the fact we see so little of this "man of many laughs." Don "Gushing" Ameche was thinking too much of "Don" and not enough of 'Charlie Dwyer" during the filming of this picture. Too much of anything is bad but too much of Ameche is positively terrible. "Alexander's Ragtime Band" is a big time picture despite Ameche, so bring it to town, your theatre owners, and give your patrons the break that comes too infrequently, the opportunity of reviewing a musical with a swell story, grand acting and the very best in music. Running time, 105 minutes. Played December 24.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

ALWAYS GOODBYE: Barbara Stanwyck, Herbert Marshall, Binnie Barnes, Ian Hunter—An enjoyable picture. Not exception, not wonderful, but it is enjoyable and one liked by all. It won't do wonders at the box office, but it makes a nice co-feature if you play double features. Running time, 74 minutes. Played December 13-14.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

ALWAYS IN TROUBLE: Jane Withers, Robert Kellard, Jean Rogers—Another swell picture from Miss Withers; not as good as last three pictures but a picture you will want to play. I think Miss Withers should sing and dance more. She did neiher in this picture but it is a nice little program picture. Running time, 69 minutes. Played December 22.—Paul T. Mitchell, Mitchell Theatre, Barbourville, Ky. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT MONTE CARLO: Warner Oland—Usual Chan to surprisingly poor business. Perhaps the death of Oland was the answer. Played December 3.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

FIVE OF A KIND: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt, Claire Trevor, Joan Davis, Slim Summerville—This picture satisfied most everyone. It failed to draw as it should, however. Played December 23.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FIVE OF A KIND: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt, Claire Trevor, Joan Davis, Slim Summerville—This picture pleased average business. Audience was mostly women and children. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 19-20.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

FOUR MORE JOIN CONTRIBUTORS

Four contributors joining the reporters to "What the Picture Did for Me" in the holiday period are from the Northwest, South and Southwest, as follows:

Levi F. Roberts, New Theatre, Faulton, South Dakota
Sam Schiwetz, Rialto Theatre, Three Rivers, Texas
C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Mississippi
Jack Farr, Strand Theatre, Yorktown, Texas

Exhibitors Collier and Farr have reported before, but not within the past year. Indeed, the latest previous report from Collier was November 2, 1935.

HOLD THAT CO-ED: John Barrymore, Marjorie Weaver, George Murphy, Joan Davis, Jack Haley—Very amusing. Barrymore and Murphy were at their best. Played November 30-December 1.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

JUST AROUND THE CORNER: Shirley Temple, Joan Davis, Charles Farrell, Armanda Duff, Bert Lahr, Bill Robinson—A good Shirley Temple picture that failed to draw. Business falling off with every Temple picture. Fox better give Shirley something different or she will be a has-been within a year. Business below average.—Sam Schiwetz, Rialto Theatre, Three Rivers, Texas. Small town patronage.

KIDNAPED: Warner Baxter, Freddie Bartholomew, Arleen Whelan, C. Aubrey Smith—The picture is OK but pretty old. If you are hard up for product, OK. Otherwise, there are lots of better newer ones. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 15-16.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

MY LUCKY STAR: Sonja Henie, Richard Greene, Joan Davis Cesar Romero, Buddy Ebsen—It was liked in our house and fairly well patronized. True, Sonja should benefit by a stronger story, but until one comes along her incomparable skating is good reason to attend her pictures. Played November 24-25.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MY LUCKY STAR: Sonja Henie—Wonderful skating on the part of Miss Henie. Our patrons were comparatively few but all enjoyed the performance. Played December 7-8.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SALLY, IRENE AND MARY: Fred Allen, Alice Faye, Tony Martin, Joan Davis, Jimmy Durante, Marjorie Weaver—Sally good. Irene good. Mary good. "Sally, Irene and Mary" good. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 17.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

SUEZ: Tyrone Power, Loretta Young, Annabella—A great picture if there ever was one, and this is one that will not be forgotten in a week. A picture that will go good in small town. Pictures like this can't be praised too much. Excellent cast, excellent photography and an excellent show enjoyed by all. Running time, 104 minutes. Played December 25.—Paul T. Mitchell, Mitchell Theatre, Barbourville, Ky. Small town patronage.

SUEZ: Tyrone Power, Loretta Young, Annabella—This fine production of the building of the Suez canal will do extra business in any situation. One of the finest from Fox, who has given us "Alexander" and "In Old Chicago." A picture that is typical of the fine production and fine acting that the stars and the director turned in. Should rank with "San Francisco" and "In Old Chicago" as far as disaster sequences are concerned. Every school should be contacted as to educational advantages the classes can obtain from this masterpiece.—Sam Schiwetz, Rialto Theatre, Three Rivers, Texas. Small town patronage.

United Artists

ALGIERS: Charles Boyer, Hedy Lamarr, Sigrid Gurie, Joseph Calleia, Alan Hale, Gene Lockhart—Will probably be one of the 10 best pictures of 1938. We'll take the Box Office Champions and leave the rest for the critics. No biz. This Lamarr miss is going places. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 5-6.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

ALGIERS: Charles Boyer, Hedy Lamarr, Sigrid Gurie—This one must be what is called a mystery play and, as such, it seems to be successful for, after seeing it twice, I am quite mystified as to what most of it is about. There is a lot of good acting but, while incorporating a lot of broken English in a foreign picture may add to its realism, it certainly does not help an American understand it. Still a number liked this show very much. Running time, 95 minutes. Played December 3-4.—Dr. G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

DRUMS: Sabu, Raymond Massey, Roger Livesey, Valerie Hobson—This is a picture that will click 100 per cent in a small town. Played this one as a midnight show. Seemed to draw and pleased 100 per cent. The color is beautiful and the picture seems to hold interest from the beginning to the ending. A swell picture to tie in with your schools. Running time, 91 minutes. Played December 2-3.—Paul T. Mitchell, Mitchell Theatre, Barbourville, Ky. Small town patronage.

Universal

LITTLE TOUGH GUYS IN SOCIETY: "Dead End" Kids, Mary Boland, Edward Everett Horton, Mischa Auer, Helen Parrish—Very good. Just about in a class with the original for these kids, their memorable "Dead End" performances. Did not draw as well as we expected, nevertheless. Played November 26.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

SWING THAT CHEER: Tom Brown, Andy Devine, Constance Moore—A nice little football picture that will please as second half of double bill.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

THAT CERTAIN AGE: Deanna Durbin, Melvyn Douglas, Jackie Cooper, Irene Rich, John Halliday, Nancy Carroll—While only moderate at the box office, this is tip top grade A entertainment. Darned if we can see why any town shouldn't turn out solidly for such fine fun as this. Played November 27-28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

YOUNG FUGITIVES: Harry Davenport, Robert Wilcox, Dorothea Kent—A misleading title that disguises the true values of this picture. It is just the thing to use in cooperation with some patriotic occasion or order, especially those having Civil War connections. A little more pep would have enlivened proceedings, however. Fair generally. Running time, November 22.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

MEN ARE SUCH FOOLS: Wayne Morris, Priscilla Lane, Humphrey Bogart, Hugh Herbert—Woo-woo-woo-woo-woo-woo, who says men are such fools. Woo-woo-woo-woo, I don't consider myself such a fool for booking this one in and you won't either. Woo-woo-woo-woo. Running time, 69 minutes. Played December 15-16.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

SISTERS, THE: Bette Davis, Errol Flynn, Anita Louise, Jane Bryan, Dick Foran, Ian Hunter—A box office natural that word of mouth advertising will build for a splendid second day run. Bette Davis gives the best performance of her career and Errol Flynn still stands out as a box office favorite. Play it. You won't be disappointed.—Sam Schiwetz, Rialto Theatre, Three Rivers, Texas. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

NOT GUILTY ENOUGH: Broadway Comedies—A good comedy.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS: No. 2—As usual these are always good for audience appeal. This one is not an exception. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

VIOLENT IS THE WORD FOR CURLEY: Broadway Comedies—A fairly good short. Running time, 18 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

Educational

BUGS BETTLE AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Terry-Toon—Fair.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

KINGDOM FOR A HORSE: Treasure Chest—A short that will please those who love horses. From "Old Dobbin," the junk wagon puller, straight through the gamut of the equine kingdom, including turf, hunting green and polo fields. Also excellent shots of those now-seldom-seen heroes of the red and brass fire wagons. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

PRIVATE LIFE OF THE GANNETS: Treasure Chest—Excellent natural history reel on bird life.—

L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WANNA BE A MODEL?: Two-Reel Comedies—Some girls, some music, little else.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WHO'S WHO: Two-Reel Comedies—Quite good.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BEAUTIFUL BUDAPEST: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—First rate.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BLUE MONDAY: Captain and the Kids—Just another cartoon. Not so good. This series has been a disappointment to us all season. Running time, nine minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

COME ACROSS: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Still the tops of the product. Wonderful for a series to continue on the high plane that it started with year after year. Never have been afraid of one of these yet. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA ON PARADE: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—As good as any in this series and they are excellent travel reels.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

HONDURAS HURRICANE: Captain and the Kids—Another producer has made this same cartoon and made a much better job of it. Just fair. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

HOW TO RAISE A BABY: Robert Benchley—Amusing burlesque on care of the baby.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

IT'S IN THE STARS: Eleanor Lynn, Johnny Downs—An excellent musical that went over big with the younger generation. Miss Lynn is one of our favorite youngsters and did not let us down in this short. She has yet to turn in a bad performance. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

IT'S IN THE STARS: Johnny Downs, Eleanor Lynn—Good subject for the most part due to Johnny Downs and the girl, who make it worth screening.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NEWS OF THE DAY: No. 222—OK. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

NOSTRADAMUS: Historical Mysteries—Excellent. This series runs hot and cold. Some are excellent and others poor. This one is tops for audience appeal as it is very educational and told in very simple terms. Can people foretell the future? What do you think? Proper booking makes it outstanding. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

OPTICAL POEM: MGM Miniatures—One of finest musical interpretations ever shown. The audience gave it a nice hand.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PASSING PARADE, THE: It was excellent, awe inspiring, entertaining, different, terrific, TNT and one of the best shorts I have ever seen. Running time, 11 minutes.—Jack Farr, Strand Theatre, Yorktown, Texas. General patronage.

PASSING PARADE: No. 1—A small March of Time that may improve with age. This one was rather dry but we may have an improvement. Running time, nine minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

SNOW GETS IN YOUR EYES: Musical Comedies—Just an average two-reel comedy with music.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

STORY OF DR. CARVER: Pete Smith Specialties—A wonderful short that we had been kicking around all season and were agreeably surprised when we played it. Excellent. Running time, nine minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

WHAT A LION! Captain and the Kids—Okay. Several good laughs. 'Tis welcome news, however, to learn Harmon-Ising are returned to Metro's cartoon producing.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Paramount

HUNKY AND SPUNKY: Color Classics—A dandy colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

JEEP, THE: Popeye the Sailor—A fair cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PARAMOUNT NEWS: No. 34—O. K. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

PLAYFUL POLAR BEARS: Color Classics—An excellent colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RUBE GOLDBERG'S TRAVELGAB: Paragraphics—Amusing but not a comedy.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

STAR REPORTER, NO. 3: Headliners—Ted Husing introduces the orchestras of Mark Warnow and Freddie Rich along with a one man band act (Vic Hyde) and a dance routine. It makes a fair variety show. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

RKO Radio

FOX HUNT, THE: Walt Disney Cartoons—Fair.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NO SALE: Nu-Atlas Productions—This one wouldn't be worth running if you got it for nothing. First time we've had patrons make a point of knocking a short. Running time, 11 minutes.—Mrs. Ann Stone, Star Theatre, Unity, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural and small town patronage.

WHALERS, THE: Walt Disney Cartoons—What a letdown. Disney must have been working on "Ferdinand" and made this during dinner hour. Not so hot. Running time, five minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

WHALERS, THE: Walt Disney Cartoons—A dandy. Very funny.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

FILMING BIG THRILLS: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—Not what we expected. For us, the title was misleading. We failed to see anything "thrilling" in the shots of riots, floods, war, destruction of the Hindenburg and assassination of King Alexander. Perhaps our interpretation of the word "thrilling" when used in this connection is entirely wrong. However, it was an interesting short. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

GLASS SLIPPER, THE: Terry-Toons—This cartoon gives a new version of Cinderella in color with Mae West as the fairy godmother.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

LAND OF CONTENTMENT: Magic Carpet Series—Average travel talk.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MOVIETONE NEWS: No. 24—OK. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

RECORDING MODERN SCIENCE: Adventure of the Newsreel Cameraman—Average science reel.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

Universal

BEAUTY SHOPPE: Montone Musical Comedies—Again Universal gives us a good short in this vaudeville reel. The second one we have played this season, and if all are as good as the first two we will be pleased. Do not waste it. Running time, 20 minutes. A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

STRANGER THAN FICTION: No. 53—The first of this series we have played and are not disappointed. Hope the balance will be as good as this one. Very interesting. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

CRACKED ICE: Merrie Melodies—An excellent colored cartoon. The takeoff on W. C. Fields and "Charlie McCarthy" was very good. This series has been good throughout the entire year. Running time, nine minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

DEAR OLD DAD: Floyd Gibbons' "Your True Adventure" Series—About average.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FEUD THERE WAS, A: Merrie Melodies—A swell hillbilly cartoon in colors.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

FREE AND EASY: "Charlie McCarthy," Edgar Bergen—Okay.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

JOHNNY SMITH AND POKER HUNTAS: Merrie Melodies—Found at last. An exchange that does not pull a topical subject even when booked on an important holiday like Thanksgiving Day and give it to some other guy. This cartoon was perfect for Thanksgiving as we had thought likely when we booked it. We appreciate being able to run it when we wanted to. If we plan our show well in advance and do get confirmations accordingly, there seems to be no good reason for a booker to cancel our bookings at the last minute so that the big fellow who has just woke up to the value of a certain subject can have our print. Thanks, Vitaphone.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LITTLE PANCHO VANILLA: Merrie Melodies—Very good colored cartoon from Warners. They are as good as the Disneys.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

LOVE AND CURSES: Merrie Melodies—A very good short. Book it if you like them a little different. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

MIRACLES OF SPORT: Color Parade—Several interesting highlights in this one. Of particular interest was the work of Dr. and Mrs. Wehner, who have perfected a method for healing broken legs suffered by race horses. Should be of interest to all and not necessarily racing fans alone. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

OUT WEST WHERE THE STARS BEGIN: Broadway Brevities—O. K. any place.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PORKY'S PARTY: Looney Tunes—Good enough cartoon.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SWING CAT'S JAMBOREE: Vitaphone Varieties—Disappointing. The numbers were poor, the music only fair, and when Louis Prima started to sing (?), well, that was just too much. If he's a singer "Judy's Uncle Zeke" is a Caruso. We've had much better from Prima. Running time, eight minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

Columbia

SPIDER'S WEB, THE: Warren Hull, Iris Meredith—A very good serial. Played episode seven. Running time, 18 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

Elstree Activities

Abandoning for the time being his own production, musical comedy star Jack Buchanan has gone to work at the Elstree Studios on a picture for Associated British, titled "The Gang's All Here." Thornton Freeland is directing.

Backing Buchanan in his film are Edward Everett Horton, Otto Kruger and Jack LaRue.

Buchanan's role is that of a private detective tracing some stolen Crown Jewels of a Ruritanian State.

LaRue appears as the crook responsible for the robbery, while Edward Everett Horton is cast as Buchanan's man-servant.

Walter Mycroft is director of production.

Meanwhile, plans are advanced at Elstree for the continuance of production activity which has not ceased during the past twelve months. The Elstree Studios have, in fact, been the most consistently active of all British studios.

Due for early production at Elstree is "Funny Face," in which Elsie Randolph, stage partner of Jack Buchanan, is to have the leading role.

At the conclusion of work on "Black Eyes," temporarily suspended during the illness of Mary Maguire, production will start upon a second version of A. E. W. Mason's story "At the Villa Rose," with Kenneth Kent as Inspector Hanaud.

Another Mason story is scheduled, "The House of the Arrow."

Among the productions on the Associated British schedule for 1939 is "William," a study of British boyhood adapted from the Richard Crompton stories.

"Poison Pen" by Richard Llewellen is being written into script by Walter Summers.

Three of Elstree's younger contract players, Diana Churchill, Peter Murray Hill and Geoffrey Toone, are to star jointly in "First Episode," a film of University life.

Also on the program are "Coffee for One," "Piccadilly," an underworld thriller by Gordon Beckles, "Cafe de Paris" and a West country film, "The Farmer's Wife."

Sophie Stewart is to star in another Scottish subject, and Geoffrey Toone is to wear a naval uniform again in Ian Hay's "The Middle Watch."

Tommy Trinder, recent hit of British radio, is now under contract to Associated British and will make his first film for AB early in 1939.

The foregoing are scheduled for production between now and April when a new program of production begins, details of which are promised shortly by Walter Mycroft.

20th-Fox Outlay

The expenditure of over £1,000,000 ($5,000,000) is contemplated by Twentieth Century-Fox, details of whose production program in association with the Gainsborough Studios have now been announced.

The pictures are to be made under the production aegis of Maurice Ostrer and Edward Black and will, of course, be distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox in England—some of them in the United States.

Robert T. Kane, executive in charge of Twentieth Century Productions, will work in an administrative capacity.

Among the artists who will figure in these productions in the coming production year are Gracie Fields, Annabella, Gordon Harker, Alastair Sim, Sydney Howard, Robertson Hare, Alfred Drayton, Graham Moffatt, Moore Marriott, Will Fyffe, The Crazy Gang, Margaret Lockwood, Michael Redgrave, Renee Houston, Nova Pilbeam and Arthur Askey.

Gainsborough has nearly completed "A Girl Must Live."

In 1939 Monty Banks will supervise and direct "Shipyard Sally," starring Gracie Fields and Will Fyffe. Gracie Fields will be seen in another picture, either "Sam and Sally," a cavalcade of the British music hall, or "Hindle Wakes." As before, Will Fyffe will be in the cast with Gracie. Monty Banks again will direct and supervise.

"Rob Roy" will be made in color.

The Crazy Gang—Flanagan and Allan, Nervo and Knox, and Naughton and Gold—will figure in a Klondike "Gold Rush" type of story. Moore Marriott will also be in the cast, directed by Marcel Varnel.

Sydney Howard will be seen in "London after Dark."

A second Hornleigh picture will continue the radio detective's adventures. Gordon Harker and Alastair Sim will play leading parts. This picture will be titled "Inspector Hornleigh in the B.B.C."

"Charley's Aunt" will star Arthur Askey, radio's current hit.

Michael Redgrave, Margaret Lockwood and Gordon Harker will figure in a newspaper story entitled "The Girl in the News."

H. de Vere Stacpoole's best-seller, "The Blue Lagoon," will be made in color, and it is hoped that in addition to Margaret Lockwood and Will Fyffe, Richard Greene will star in the cast.

Another important picture is "Hangman's House" from the story by Donn Byrne, author of "Wings of the Morning." George Sanders will be in the cast and so will the Gate and the Abbey Players.

Annabella is under contract to make two pictures over here. One of them may be "Sunshine Susie."

"Handley Cross," a modern Jorrocks story which is at present titled "Tally-Ho," is to be made with Sydney Howard and Nova Pilbeam.

Wendy Hiller, star of "Pygmalion," has been placed under contract by Gabriel Pascal for five years. Her next picture will follow "The Doctor's Dilemma," which is to commence in mid-February, but the actual story has not yet been chosen. Following this she will go into production in Bernard Shaw's story, "Major Barbara."

The script of "The Doctor's Dilemma" is being written by Ian Dalrymple, and settings have been designed by Laurence Irving, who was art director on "Pygmalion." Pascal will co-direct with a Hollywood director.

The comedy team of Will Hay, Graham Moffatt and Moore Marriott will return to the screen again in "Ask a Policeman," a current Gainsborough production in which Hay has the role of Sergeant Dudfoot, rustic "flat-foot" with the condescending manner.

ROBERT DONAT PORTRAYS YOUTH AND AGE AS "MR. CHIPS"

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor
GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

DIVIDENDS—AND HOW

The news of the week is the story in Motion Picture Daily telling about the extra Christmas present given Famous Players Canadian shareholders, the highest dividend, incidentally, since 1932. Here's what it says:

> "Common shareholders of Famous Players Canadian Corp. received a Christmas present in the form of a bonus of 20 per cent on each share in addition to the quarterly dividend of 15 per cent on Dec. 22, total dividend for the year being 80 cents a share. Increased business is indicated in the bonus payment because the total disbursement in 1937 was 60 cents a share."

There may be many reasons for this happy state of affairs across the border. We choose to give just one. And that one reason is the managers' sharing plan inaugurated by the wise heads of Famous Players Canadian in 1935, a plan that proves its worth more and more each year.

It isn't magic. Head office and manager establish a mutually satisfactory gross-quota for the year. In addition to his salary, the manager shares in every dollar of any extra gross above that figure. That's about all there is to it.

Obviously, the plan has not a little to do with these increased dividends to shareholders. It also pays dividends in continued circuit prosperity through effort on the part of the manager. He works at top speed the year-'round, knowing that part of every extra dollar he brings in is marked with his own initials.

"FORGET THOSE FIRST-RUNS"

Subsequent-run is a trade term to designate the status of a situation. It has nothing to do with the community surrounding the theatre despite that so many managers in the second-runs seem to think so. At least, by their campaigns.

Regardless of its place in the booking schedule, a theatre is patronized by folks who reacted equally to exploitations. Thus a stunt or contest aimed to entice first-run patrons relatively should have a similar appeal to folks who take their business to houses in other classifications. After all, logic would reason that a picture is a first-run for those who haven't seen it. And a manager who conducts his theatre in the best first-run manner, even if it isn't, is certainly entitled to consideration from the exploitation and publicity sources usually tapped by the first-run houses.

These thoughts are inspired by two recent reports, both from Famous Players Canadian territory. The first, via ad head Jim Nairn, has to do with Jim McDonough's campaign for his second-run of "Alexander" at the Palace, in London, Ontario, and detailed elsewhere in this section.

The second, an institutional campaign, is featured by a two-column smash on page one in the Toronto Evening Telegram. It concerns Jimmy Lynch's Theatre Safety Club, at the Runnymede, a subsequent-run in the uptown section of the city. The club's activities have given that sector the lowest local accident rate. Famous Players executives are studying Lynch's plan with the idea of extending it all over the circuit. As concerns the boxoffice, a membership of 900 youngsters has increased matinee business some 90 percent.

The self-created handicap of publicizing a subsequent-run is one that completely stymies a lot of boys who should know better. There would be much more effective exploitation on succeeding runs if managers in those situations would forget the first-runs entirely.

For a man in the ranks who hopes to show his stuff, one of the best spots we know of is at the helm of a subsequent-run where the possibilities are limited only by the imagination and aggressiveness of the manager.

It-Can-Be-Done Department: For the week before Christmas, Frank Cassil, of the Rialto, St. Joseph, Mo., ran daily changes of program instead of the usual five, took extra advertising, spread himself on exploitation. Cassil wound up with a flock of new attendance records and one of the year's biggest weeks.

John Newkirk, Loew's Granada Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, conceived this animated lobby display for "The Great Waltz." The cutout figures of Miliza Korjus and Fernand Gravet danced around the glass dance floor by means of concealed magnets placed on a turntable. Entire display was constructed by theatre's engineers.

Sanders Reports Numerous Activities

Week ahead of opening of "Angels with Dirty Faces," Johnny Sanders, Chief Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico, constructed a scaffold with a hangman's noose on it in front of the theatre. Handbills with picture copy and playdates were mailed to the scaffold for use of passersby. These were also distributed in town and surrounding areas.

Two weeks ahead radio plugging was started with catchlines such as "Are we giving our dirty faced kids the break they need to make them good citizens?" etc., etc. Also stressed that the way for folks to help boys was to subscribe to the local Boy Scout drive.

For the March of Time issue, Sanders approached the Mayor, who issued a proclamation declaring a Fire Prevention Week. Arrangements were made with the fire department to have the boys sell tickets for a firemen's benefit show. Opening night run of trucks from the firehouses to theatre was made, lads going through their bag of tricks, extinguishing a fake conflagration in front of theatre.

Ties "Spring Madness" To Local Football Game

Fred Osterstock, district manager of Wilmer and Vincent Theatres, for "Spring Madness" at the State Theatre, Easton, Pa., arranged for four girls on motorized scooters to ride around college stadium before big football game and on city's streets. One of the girls carried sign reading "We Want Lew Ayres," second "We're out to catch our man," and other two were placards with picture copy, theatre name and playdates. Morning paper ran the "love exam" contest and used 1,000 lucky scholarship pass-outs, both taken from the pressbook.

Special Committee Exploits "Boys Town" Engagement

What J. K. Freeman, Manos Theatre, Greensburg, Pa., reports the most important feature of his "Boys Town" campaign from the standpoint of lasting goodwill was the formation of a committee under whose auspices a private screening was held for the clergy, women's clubs, Kiwanis, Rotary, Lions and advertising clubs. Dubbed the "Committee on Motion Pictures and Youth" and consisting of the Mayor, and local prominents, letters were mailed on that committee's stationery to welfare-minded people inviting them to the screening. Comment cards were distributed at this showing and later used for lobby display. Local papers were generous with stories and picture plugs.

Telephone subscribers were called advising of playdates, scene stills planted in leading store windows, sidewalk stencils were used and local radio station ran the special MGM transcription daily week ahead of run.

Street Ballys Aid Trembley

Lad dressed in football uniform strolled through the streets of Lansing, Mich., as part of Vern Trembley's "Touchdown Army" date at the Lansing Theatre. Outfit was promoted from State College there; chap carried a football and copy on sweater, back-plugged attraction and playdates.

Cannon was borrowed for "Army Girl" and placed in front of theatre, where soldier stationed in attendance answered all questions regarding its mechanism. Papers picked up the idea and ran stories on it with generous picture mention.

Locomotive Races Coach on "Fight"

One of the outstanding stunts for "Stand Up and Fight," opening at the Maryland Theatre in Cumberland, was a race through the city between the famous B & O locomotive used in the picture and a stage coach, both of the picture's 1850 period. This reenactment was intended to help boost January clearance sales and the playdates.

Local Chamber of Commerce spent $400 for advertisements in surrounding towns, heralding the ballyhoo and students were dismissed from school to participate in the event. Advance broadcasts were arranged for, station also handling the race and picture opening.

B & O brought twelve newspaper correspondents from other Maryland cities and the Mayor issued a proclamation, stores dressed their fronts with flags and special window displays, etc. Railroad officials had two-color cards printed for placement in all their terminals, stations and with their agents as general exploitation for the picture.

Puts On Ace Campaign For "Alexander" Second Run

Neat campaign was arranged by Jim McDonough of the Palace Theatre, London, Ontario, for the second run engagement of "Alexander's Ragtime Band." Special street car was promoted and bannered appropriately on both sides; 40 piece band was planted inside playing feature song hits from the picture as car toured entire city. This stunt is reported to have been a first time for London, and McDonough says it stopped traffic all along the line. Car wound up in front of theatre, where the band gave a brief concert.

Classified ad tieup was arranged with the daily Free Press which gave the theatre hundreds of free lines of publicity. Various other tieups were effected, including bannering of fleet of trucks, special window displays and cooperation of news company, which gave gratis notices on bulletins mailed out to all local and county dealers. Also planted by the theatreman were orchestrations with local bands.

Dramatic Club Members Tied to "Dramatic School"

Mel Grundy, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, Muncie, Ind., for "Dramatic School" secured several effective breaks with the Muncie Star, netting 100 inches of space on opening day. Photos were taken of local dramatic club members, the Civic Theatre, Spotlight Group of Ball State Theatre's College and other dramatic clubs. All poses were similar to stills of the dramatic groups shown in the picture and were reproduced side-by-side with explanatory captions.

Grundy also planted a two-day classified ad contest in the same paper and personally addressed Kiwanis and Rotary groups and all dramatic clubs in addition to securing attractive displays in the main business district.

Special Lighting for "Ferdinand"

A hold-over on Walt Disney's "Ferdinand the Bull" running into the next attraction, in all an eight day run came as a result of Manager Joe Floyd's campaign on the short at the New Granada, Sioux Falls, S. D., in which the picture was given unusual prominence in the advertising and exploitation. As an instance, newspaper space ran one-third to one-half total lineage before and during the engagement.

Distinctly effective was the lobby and front topped by 14 foot cutouts of Ferdinand the Bull, especially lighted by huge kleig lamps. In addition Floyd sent out a sound ballyhoo truck completely covered with a bull cutout. Music was supplied by records of the songs from the picture, and several broadcasts were secured over Station KELO. A feature of the advertising was a teaser campaign, while newspaper space in the editorial columns was large throughout the run.

Numerous were the window displays, which created considerable attention around town, four illuminated billboards with two-thirds devoted to Ferdinand were strategically planted and bookstore featured attractive window and counter display of the books with playdates prominently spotted.

Colonels Lend Support In "Kentucky" Premiere

The entire contingent of Kentucky Colonels residing in Louisville turned out en masse to parade down the main streets as part of the festivities for the world premiere of "Kentucky" at the Rialto Theatre there.

Beginning with the trip of Governor A. B. "Happy" Chandler, Joseph Scholtz, Mayor of Louisville, and Mayor Reed Wilson of Lexington, to Hollywood for a special preview of the picture, local newspapers were filled with stories about the film which glorifies the blue grass country. Full page spreads in the Louisville papers heralded the world premiere and extra 800 line newspaper advertisements were used in the campaign. S. S. Musselman, manager of the theatre, posted the town with 24 sheets.

Erickson Presents "Crazy Auction"

Playing up the scene in "Sing You Sinners" where Bing Crosby is a "swapper," Everett R. Erickson, Ogden Theatre, Chicago, dedicated part of his stage show to what he dubbed a "Crazy Auction." Taking a floor lamp he offered it to the first person to reach the stage with a $5.00. Then the bill was offered to anyone in the audience who had two $2.00 bills. The first $2.00 bill was given for a silver dollar and the second bill given to anyone in the audience who would come up on the stage and sing the hit tune from the picture. The silver dollar was then given to any person who would play the musical accompaniment.

Announcements were made to the kids telling of the new juvenile star in the picture and newspaper publicity was landed in connection with Ellen Drew, local girl, who appears in the picture.

LAST CALL

This means, to be eligible for consideration, entries on campaigns of all kinds executed in October, November and December must be received at this office no later than the deadline date—midnight of Saturday, January 14, 1939.

As already noted, all boxoffice material is eligible. This includes campaigns on individual dates, stage presentations, institutional advertising and publicity, campaigns on Motion Pictures' Greatest Year drive, special December and Christmas promotions, New Year's Eve shows, anniversary campaigns, and what have you. In other words, folks, it's wide open.

It is important that theatremen who have scored in the previous Quarters be represented in the Final Period to insure the utmost consideration in the Grand Awards Judging where the winners of the Grand Awards will be chosen.

Therefore, last call. Mark off that deadline date on the office calendar and make sure that everything you want to be considered for the Last Quarter gets here to headquarters before the Finish Gun.

Novel Contest Aids "Five of a Kind"

Marlowe Conner, Rhodes Theatre, Chicago, has arranged with local druggist to run a "Five of a Kind" contest in his window offering passes to anyone finding five articles in the window exactly alike. Window was crowded with all types of merchandise and when the five were found, the window changed so that the number of passes could be controlled.

Theatreman also arranged promotion of five small pianos, such as were used in the picture, for foyer display. Photos of the quints with suitable copy was placed on each. Quint heralds were also distributed, entire printing cost met by merchants' paid ad on reverse side.

In conjunction with the local paper, the Rhodes will run a stork derby to find the first baby born after 12 midnight, December 31st in the community. The newspaper promoted all the prizes and gave the derby a good buildup. Two weeks after the birth of the baby, the gifts will be presented on the stage, Conner starting well in advance to build interest in the baby.

Carols Help "Carol"

D. Murphy, manager of the State Theatre, Altoona, Penna., and MGM exploiteer Charlie Baron, for "A Christmas Carol" used a trio dressed like the characters in the picture to sing carols in the city's streets. They made the rounds during shopping hours and at night when stores were opened. Among their other activities were two special screenings for separate orphan homes, a stunt which is reported to have created a lot of goodwill and secured newspaper publicity breaks.

Transatlantic Interview Arranged for "Drums"

Exploitation for the opening of "Drums" at the United Artists Theatre in Detroit as arranged by Asher B. Shaw, included a special transatlantic telephone interview between Charles Gentry, motion picture editor of the Times and Sabu in London. Editor did a special feature story on this with art, also sending it out over international news wire service to all papers.

Radio included daily plugs over department store broadcast on fall fashions, stressing in particular the turban hats as inspired by Sabu. Starting eight days ahead of opening, four spot announcements were landed on Station WXYZ. American Legion cooperated with parade, led by police escort which toured downtown streets winding up in front of theatre. Local music house arranged a tieup week ahead, whereby window display was entirely devoted to special curio drums, picture copy and playdates were prominently shown.

Head of main branch of the Y. M. C. A. was contacted, with resultant notices posted on bulletin boards of all branches. Libraries also cooperated with notices and displays and United Airlines gave a window with large card and still of Sabu with his bodyguards standing beside a United plane, copy tying in with picture and playdates.

Siegal Acts as Santa

The children in the neighborhood of the Freeman Theatre, Bronx, had an early Christmas this year, when Manager Ed Siegal, dressed as Chris Kringle, greeted the kids in the lobby and presented each with some promoted toy. Also appearing on his special show was Maxie Berger, lightweight boxer, who entertained the children.

Says Exhibition Suffering From Lack of "Circus-ing"

Hagenbeck-Wallace Advance Agent Reports on Tour

by VERNON REAVER

I have recently completed a transcontinental tour embracing twenty-four states and four provinces in Canada, as advance contracting agent for the Hagenbeck-Wallace circus, one of the largest railroad shows on the road. Having managed and exploited theatres for a good many years I was interested more than the average traveler in the way theatres were operated and the method of selling their wares in the different localities where this long trip took me.

Some localities are not as liberal as others. The general morals of a section may have a great deal to do with the disposition of the people as to their choice of entertainment. The idea of a nation wide advertising campaign will greatly benefit some sections and will be a decided flop in others. In some sections the local theatre manager will try to discourage other types of entertainment from coming into his town, while in other places the theatre manager will encourage competition because he knows that the more activity there is increases the interest of the people in amusements and makes them show-minded.

Visits Many Theatres

The past season I visited 150 theatres in as many cities. I did not acquaint myself with the theatre manager in but a few instances, prefering to observe the way the theatre was operated, how the show was presented and the method of selling the show to its patrons. I regret that my findings resulted mostly in the same conclusion, that often the local manager was handicapped because he was confined to certain rules and a budget based on recommendations of a centralized operating office. In situations where a local man owned the houses it was different and in cases of that kind the independent appeared to be doing the best business.

In publicizing the theatre the manager should not impose the same old advertising stuff on his patrons and expect them to believe that every picture is terrific or super-stupendous or the greatest show yet produced. They are all wised up to that way of advertising. Every time that a really outstanding picture comes along, my suggestion would be to go to town on it—Circus it. my advice is, forget the window cards that have been used week in and week out. They become eye sores as the style is always the same except change of color now and then.

Advocates Selling Theatre

Write personal letters to patrons now and then instead of heralds to the mailing list. Remember that outside of the major cities that the drop-in trade to any theatre doesn't amount to much. Each customer is "sold" before he leaves his home. People read the headlines and they do the same thing in their picture shopping.

My contention is that the local theatre manager should sell the theatre to his patrons. Try and make them mindful of his theatre. Endeavor to build up the feeling in the community that whenever anyone wants to see a show that they will first think of his theatre. Circus titles mean nothing except the name Barnum but the word "Circus" does mean something. Sell all the people on your theatre. If the show is good, they will come back.

"Circuses" Shows to Profits

Along about 1928 when the sound on film installations were keeping the theatre circuits busy getting ready for talking pictures, Carl Laemmle, then president of Universal Pictures, splashed all over the press sheets of that company—"Bill it like a circus." Very few theatre managers were equipped with the experience required to "Bill it like a circus." Having been in all branches of the circus business I was determined to bill my theatre like a circus, entirely different from the suggestions and rules contained in the advertising manuals. I was the manager of a combination vaudeville and picture house in one of the large southern cities.

This city had three major circuit theatres operating on the same combination of policy besides a stock burlesque, a dramatic stock house and several movie theatres. The business was pretty much divided, but hardly enough to make all the houses profitable. My boss came in one day after I had been there about six months without much sign of improvement in business, although we had the best vaudeville. I told him I could get business if the company would give me a free hand, so after much discussion he got permission from the home office for me to shoot in my own way.

Campaign Is Talk of Town

Well, I literally "Circused" that town. I went out and personally contracted every wall in the city that was any good. I hired a couple of circus banner tackers that I knew off of circus advertising cars who were home from the road tour, we tacked 150 twelve-sheet muslin banners on all the walls. These banners were purple on orange which is a most attractive color combination for large posters and were attractively designed but simple in wording. As a result one could not look in any direction without seeing one of these banner locations. We didn't confine the walls to one banner but had all the walls and barricades completely covered. It was the talk of the town. The opposition houses cried that this was unethical advertising but it sold the theatre.

I realize that this is not possible or practical in a great many situations, but many opportunities are being lost through lack of more circus exploitation. It is a true saying that the play is the thing but in this day and age the playhouse as well as the play must be sold to the public. This can be done by a more aggressive policy of advertising, for it takes more than routine today to keep patrons theatre-conscious.

Warners Engage Unusual Promotion On Four Daughters

Reported as a first time for Hanover, Penna., Manager Charlie Moyer, Warner's State Theatre based his entire "Four Daughters" campaign on a "money-back guarantee." Special trailer was made up stressing the guarantee and carrying the theatreman's personal endorsement. Heralds plugging the engagement were distributed house-to-house within a radius of 25 miles and another reported "first" was the double truck solicited from merchants by Moyer. All ads called attention to the engagement and streamer across top included merchants' endorsement.

Moyer made a personal announcement from stage every week for several weeks ahead of opening, whispering campaign in which all employees participated was engaged in and opening day, cashier called telephone subscribers plugging playdates. Street bally included chap seated on box in front of theatre, back banner advising he was waiting for the show to open and "reminder" cards signed by the management were distributed in lobby.

On to Coshocton, Ohio

Cigar boxes painted black with white letters carried by boys and laid down to spell out title letters was stunt which attracted the attention anticipated by H. F. Bodie, Sixth Street Theatre. Other outdoor activities included man wearing raincoat who paraded streets carrying black umbrella on which were attached stills with copy.

Ten boys on decorated bicycles each carrying a large card on which was one of the title letters, rode along directly behind band in the local Christmas parade, public address system on bannered truck making announcements locally and in surrounding towns. Sets of four cards, each with a different head and name of one of the four girls in the picture were distributed singly at boxoffice in connection with contest for which guest prizes were awarded to those collecting full set.

Copy of the Coshocton Tribune was mailed out to the studio by Bodie, who arranged for Rosemary Lane to be photoed reading it on the set. Picture was later planted in local paper by manager together with stories and further art work. Special lobby setpiece was made on which were tacked rave reviews from the New York papers.

While at Wilkinsburg

The townsfolk of this city were aware of the picture's playdates well in advance of opening, for R. E. Brown, manager of the Rowland, staged a "Four Daughters Bicycle Parade." Boys and girls with police escort rode their bannered bikes throughout the city streets.

Permission was obtained from superintendent of schools to display a card on bulletin boards of eight schools and his assurance was given that the picture would be plugged in classes. Tinted Priscilla Lane photos were distributed, entire cost met by merchant's ad on reverse side, as were door knob hangers with cut of the stars. Window tieup was arranged with leading dress shop to display fashions for young girls.

OBITUARIES

Eugene Brewster, Publisher, Dies

Eugene V. Brewster died January 1st of heart disease in the Long Island College Hospital, a scant quarter mile from the downtown Brooklyn address where in 1911 he launched a motion picture "fan" magazine that ultimately made him a millionaire. He was 67 years old.

Mr. Brewster, a lawyer for 16 years, became interested in motion pictures when he attended a dinner nearly 30 years ago and engaged directors of the new Vitagraph Company in conversation. On Duffield Street in the Borough Hall section of Brooklyn he started as manager of the Motion Picture Magazine. Soon he bought control. As originally started the magazine was free but soon a price was set.

Mr. Brewster supplied facts and photographs of the doings at studios at Fort Lee on the Palisades, on Fourteenth Street, in Philadelphia and other points.

Motion Picture Classic, Movie Monthly, Beauty and Shadowland poured off the Duffield Street presses. At one time the publisher estimated his wealth at $3,000,000. Complex litigation involving personal family issues led to the sale in 1926 of the film magazine properties.

Born in Bay Shore, L. I., Sept. 7, 1871, Mr. Brewster attended Pennington Seminary and Princeton University. He published "What to Do with Trusts" in 1906, offered "What's What in America" in 1920 and followed with biographies of Woodrow Wilson and Napoleon. Books, articles, brochures on art, the theatre and finance were mingled with motion picture scenarios and plays.

He married Liane Hill, a writer, after he had divorced Corliss Palmer, cigaret girl and beauty contest winner; Eleanor V. V. Cator and his first wife, Emilie C. Churbuck.

Carleton Brewster Dies

Carleton E. Brewster, 66, brother of the late Eugene V. Brewster, died Wednesday in an automobile accident near Smyrna, Florida. He was for many years an operator of motion picture theatres and at one time owned a group of theatres on Long Island.

Mr. Brewster is survived by his widow, Sarah Brewster, and two sons, Douglas W. and Carleton, Jr.

Florence Lawrence Dead

Florence Lawrence, once a star of the silent films, died December 28th in Beverly Hills Receiving Hospital, Cal., from self-administered poison, according to the police. For the past three years she had been working in a stock company on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot. In earlier days she was co-starred with such players as Mary Pickford, Maurice Costello and Clara Kimball Young. She was 52.

Ernest Brinkman

Ernest Brinkman, stage and screen actor, died in Los Angeles December 28th at the age of 66. For many years he toured vaudeville circuits with an act billed as Brinkman and the Steele Sisters.

John J. Malloy

John J. Malloy, former stage manager, died December 26th in Buffalo at the age of 65. He was associated for many years with the late Michael Shea in operation of the Garden and Court Street film and vaudeville houses in Buffalo.

Rube Jackter Heads Columbia Campaign

Rube Jackter, Columbia assistant sales manager, has been designated chairman of the company's "Personal Achievement Campaign," which starts January 9th for 10 weeks. A. Montague, general sales manager, has approved two awards for the drive, one for branch managers and salesmen and the other for bookers.

Joseph A. McConville, foreign sales manager, has been appointed honorary chairman of the drive.

IN COURTS

Consolidated and Sunray File Suits

Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., has filed suit in New York supreme court for 18,612 with six per cent interest from 1927 against Arthur Rawlins and Carlyle Blackwell, doing business as Carlyle Blackwell Productions. Suit is based on the balance of principal and interest allegedly due on a promissory note for $30,000. Mr. Blackwell filed an answer denying the allegations and asserting he is not connected with Mr. Rawlins.

Sunray Films, Inc., has filed suit in New York supreme court against Select Attractions, Inc., Leo Malchen, doing business as French Film Exchange, and Charles Swarzza, doing business as Island Theatres Circuit. Plaintiff alleges that its film, "Little Flower of Jesus," was subjected to unfair competition because the defendants' picture, "The Glory of Faith," was being represented as the product of the plaintiffs.

Loew Briefs Filed

Briefs were filed last Friday with Justice Louis A. Valente of the New York supreme court by Emil K. Ellis, as attorney for plaintiff stockholders and by Joseph M. Proskauer, as attorney for Loew's and the other defendants in the stockholders' suit brought against Loew's. The decision is not now expected before February as Justice Valente will require that time to study the briefs.

First "Raffles" in England

The first of a new series of "Raffles" pictures for Samuel Goldwyn will be made in England. It will be called "Colonel Rowan of Scotland Yard." Others in the detective series planned for David Niven will be made later in Hollywood.

Samuel Davidson, president of Cameo Screen Attractions, has purchased for New England distribution the Herbert Wilcox musical, "The Gang," and "Convicts at Large," from Fred McConnell, of Record Pictures.

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1938-39 season. Asterisk (*) after title of feature denotes first appearance of picture in Release Chart.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures announced by the home offices of the distributing companies.

When a production is reviewed in Hollywood, the running time is as officially given by the West Coast studio of the company at the time of the review, and this fact is denoted by an asterisk (*) immediately preceding the number. As soon as the home office has established the running time for national release, any change from the studio figure is made and the asterisk is removed.

Running times are subject to change according to local conditions. State or city censorship deletions may cause variations from the announced and published figures; repairs to the film may be another reason.

U.S. ROYAL SPONGE FOAM

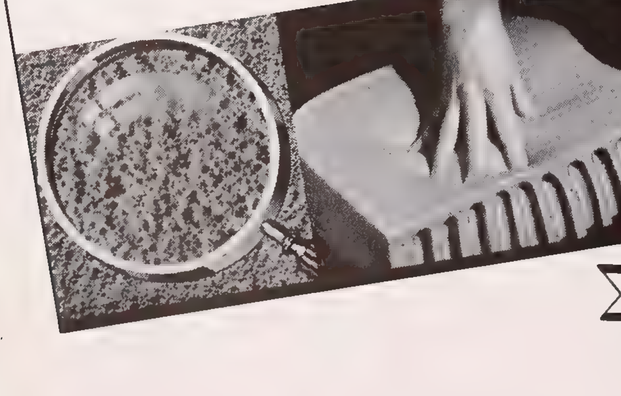
The luxurious new seat cushioning

Next to maintaining a high standard of entertainment, the surest way to attract customers and stimulate repeat business is to provide unusual comfort for your patrons. The newest and most modern way to assure greater customer satisfaction is to specify and purchase seats equipped with new U. S. Royal Sponge Foam Cushions. U. S. Royal Sponge Foam Cushions are entirely new and different. They are made of a new but thoroughly proven material known as Sponge Rubber Foam, which is surprisingly cool, clean, and sanitary and unusually durable. U. S. Royal Sponge Foam Cushions conform perfectly to the contours of the body. Patrons do not sit "on" the seats but "in" them. Complete physical relaxation and comfort is afforded that is beyond compare. It is important to you, too that U. S. Royal Sponge Foam Cushions definitely lower maintenance expense. No servicing is necessary because there are no springs, tufts or padding to loosen and push through. Injury and damage claims are also lessened. Seats are easily re-upholstered over these new cushions by simply fitting the upholstery over the cushion and tacking it down.

WHAT IS SPONGE FOAM?

Latex is the pure sap of the rubber tree. It is whipped to a foam, poured into cushion-shaped molds and vulcanized. Under a glass you see thousands of tiny open rubber cells. This open cell structure gives Sponge Foam its remarkable comfort, coolness and durability.



IN USE FOR THREE YEARS

For three years U. S. Royal Sponge Foam Cushioning has proved its superiority in streamline trains, sleeping cars, buses, street cars, and in the automotive field. It is also now in use in several theatres. Based on this broad experience we are in a position to give you definite facts and figures about its many outstanding advantages. We invite you to write for special detailed folder on the use of Royal Sponge Foam in theatre seats.

MODELED FOR PLAY OF LIGHT AND SHADOWS

■ From Australia come these examples of designing-in-light. The theatre is Loew's Metro in Perth, capital of Western Australia, situated 1,700 miles northwest of Melbourne. With a color scheme of pastel shades, the interior acquires both its lines and its ornamentation largely through the application of luminous devices. Designed by Baxter, Cox & Leighton of Perth, the treatment represents the complete remodeling of an existing theatre structure. Recently opened, it is the sixth theatre in Australia of Loew's foreign organization. . . . The auditorium, which seats 1,600 on two floors, has walls paneled horizontally below the balcony level, and checkerboarded above, while rounded cornices connecting front and furred-out rear sections bear bas-reliefs; but these areas offer little more than a background for the bold light-and-shadow formations of the ceiling. Here stepped, square cornice structures conceal lamps sending light through downward apertures, both round and square, and more brilliantly through closely spaced fascia apertures. The latter border a broad central panel which, in turn, is broken up into recessed panels flooded from coves. . . . Dominating the foyer-lounge (immediately above) are coved wall strips and a cove-lighted square ceiling coffer. Noteworthy here also are tall columns, in two corners, surfaced with rectangular bits of glass to reflect the light from myriad planes. At left is a section of the lobby, showing glazed box-lights above the ticket kiosk. The Metro is fully air-conditioned, having a Carrier automatically controlled system.

222 NEW THEATRE PROJECTS REPORTED LAST HALF OF '38

IN SPITE of highly unfavorable business conditions during a great part of the year, new theatre construction projects for 1938 declined less than 11% as compared with 1937, according to Better Theatres' Projects Bulletin Service. A total of 222 new construction projects were reported for the last half of the year just ended, as against 207 for the first six months, making the 1938 total 429 in all. This figure bears out almost exactly the estimate printed in Better Theatres last March, in which it was predicted that the year would see approximately a 10% drop under the 1937 new projects total of 481.

The trend in the closing months showed some interesting reversals in seats per theatre and in total construction costs. The national seating average has been estimated up to recently at about 650. The Hays Organization set a figure of 640 for all theatres operating at the end of 1936, and there have been increases since. Projects for 1937 and the first half of 1938 showed an average close to 900 seats per theatre. During the final six months of the year, however, new projects seating (based on detailed reports covering 144 of the projected 222 theatres) showed an average seating capacity of only 686.

Costs Opposite Capacity Trend

Construction costs, however, taking the year as a whole, have not followed the same trend. Seats per theatre during 1937 averaged nearly 900, and construction costs about $85,000. For the first half of 1938 seating remained substantially unchanged while construction cost fell to an average of $50,000, showing a preference for the same theatre size coupled with economies effected at the expense of architectural appointments or decoration. But in the last half of the year costs rose to a $67,000 average while seating declined to 686, indicating an apparent preference for more elaborate architectural arrangements even at the cost of lower seating capacity.

These figures are, however, subject to the qualification that they show trends only, since it was not possible to obtain complete data on all new projects reported. The seating figures of the past six months are based on reports covering only 144 out of the total 222 new theatre projects, while construction cost figures were available only in 85 instances. The same qualification of course applies to figures for the first six months of 1938, and for 1937 and previous years.

The trend toward smaller capacity was most pronounced in the South and West. In the East South Central states the available figures give an average of 424 seats per house; in the West South Central states, 453 seats. Mountain states figures show an average seating capacity of 525.

Contrary indications were found along the Atlantic seaboard, with an average of 983 seats per house in the South Atlantic area, 967 seats in New England and 744 in the Middle Atlantic region. The Pacific Coast average approximated the last named with an average seating capacity of 751, as did also the East North Central states with an average of 739. The West North Central states came closest to the national average with a figure of 655.

Midwest States Lead

The East North Central states, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, led in construction activity, with 54 new projects out of the national total of 222. The South Atlantic region, comprising Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida and the District of Columbia, were in second place with 38. Further details will be found on page 32 of this issue. Mountain states trailed with only 9, but New England was scarcely more active with a total of 11. This distribution of activity is greatly different from that of the first half of the year, but reversals of the trend can be noted with respect to some individual sections. Thus New England (in spite of the hurricane, or perhaps because of it) shows a decline in activity since July. The South Atlantic and East North Central states, the leaders in construction, show an increase about in keeping with the national trend, while the Middle Atlantic states are far ahead of the trend.

Local Influence Notable

Strictly local conditions appear to have been the strongest factor in controlling new theatre projects. The unequal distribution of activity as between different sections of the country existed to more marked degree than usual within the different areas. In the closing six months of 1938 small states were found projecting many new theatres, while far more populous neighbors, immediately adjoining, lagged behind. In the South Atlantic group, Georgia and North Carolina led heavily, with Florida and Virginia trailing. In the East North Central region both Ohio and Illinois outstrip Indiana almost three to one. Pennsylvania showed materially greater activity than more heavily populated New York; and in the Southwest both Louisiana and Arkansas maintained a six to one lead over Texas.

Providing for an Efficient System of Air Distribution

● It has often been said that more air supply systems fail in distribution than in conditioning equipment. Here are pointers on this important function

By CARL F. BOESTER

AS ONE manufacturer of air distributing equipment repeatedly states, "No air-conditioning system is better than its air distribution." No truer statement can be made. One may somehow manage to heat, or even cool, the air to some degree, but to be able to distribute it evenly, without drafts, and to maintain an even temperature throughout the conditioned space is indeed an art calling for an engineer skilled to the greatest degree.

The important thing about the conditioning of the air, by heating or cooling and otherwise treating it to produce comfortable conditions, is the degree of efficiency with which such treatment is accomplished.

Efficiency Must Be High

This is reflected in the first cost of the equipment and, even more important, in the operating cost. However, when it comes to air distribution, anything short of expert efficiency is sure to cause bad results in personal discomfort of the occupants of the conditioned area, as well as contributing to high first and operating costs.

Air (in addition to its respiratory function) serves as the means of transporting heat—or, it is the vehicle by which heat is supplied or removed from an enclosure in order to provide personal comfort within it. In winter, for example, a given quantity of air leaving an enclosed space at a temperature of approximately 70°, is passed through the winter conditioning equipment, where dust and other foreign material are removed, where moisture is added, and also heat of the required amount, and then carried back to provide ideal comfort conditions.

Differences in Summer Operation

In summer, air also serves as the vehicle upon which the heat rides; but the flow of heat under this set of conditions is in reverse—that is, the air picks up the heat, moisture and dirt in the conditioned space and is then drawn back to the conditioning equipment where the excess heat is removed from it, and also the excess moisture, dust and other foreign matter. The air is then sent back to the conditioned space, where it again picks up the heat that is filtering into, and being generated within, the conditioned area from various sources—people, electric lights, etc.

Amounts of Air Handled and Costs

CONTRARY TO general opinion, cold is not injected into the air by refrigeration. Rather, heat is removed from the air by refrigeration equipment. There is, in a general sense, no such thing as cold. Cold is a degree of warmth, lacking only in intensity. Thus, air of low heat-intensity is introduced into the conditioned space at a temperature and relative humidity condition which makes it possible for the air to absorb heat and moisture being generated in this space in excess quantities, which, if not removed, would produce great discomfort to the occupants.

"The theatre operator can save as much as 30% in the total cost of an installation by making sure the air is effectively distributed. This saving in first cost is supplemented by a marked saving in operating cost."

The method of moving air—which, as we have explained, is the vehicle for transporting heat—of evenly distributing it, and of removing it from the conditioned area after it has accomplished its purpose, is therefore quite important. Power, of course, is required to move the air. This power is generally electricity, moving the air by means of an electric motor driving a fan which in effect is a centrifugal pump moving the air from one location to another and back again. Since power is required to accomplish this movement, it is quite essential that no more air be handled than necessary to produce the desired conditions. To handle more than necessary is a waste that would cause a high operating cost. Handling too little air, on the other hand, would not produce satisfactory comfort conditions, and this would also be a waste, reflected in inadequate patron satisfaction.

Operating Adjustment to Conditions

It is most desirable to handle as small a quantity of air as possible, compatible with good results. This means smaller motors, smaller fans, and smaller air ducts, grilles, etc. It is desirable to keep a fan running all the time during which conditioning is required, and to alternately start and stop the source of heat and refrigeration, as the case may be, to provide comfortable conditions. It is even more desirable to modulate—that is, increase or decrease the amount of heat or refrigeration required—rather than merely to turn it on or off.

In summer, it is necessary to circulate more air to handle a given quantity of heat because of temperature differences. By way of illustration, the air leaves the conditioned space at about 80° and has a definite moisture content. The air is then passed through the conditioning equipment, where it is dropped approximately 20° in temperature and a definite quantity of moisture is extracted.

In winter, air leaves the conditioned space at about 70° and may be reintroduced to the conditioned space at a temperature of 150°—an 80° difference. Thus, the temperature change effected by the conditioning equipment is four times as great in winter as in summer! Thus it becomes quite obvious that less air needs to be handled in the winter than during the warm months.

Amounts of Air Handled in Summer

Technically, however, four times as much air need not be handled in summer as in winter for the simple reason that a great proportion of the heat carried by the air in summer is in the form of latent heat in the moisture of the air being withdrawn from the conditioned space. A large part of the work required of refrigerating equipment, and a substantial proportion of

A 900-Seat Theatre with Novel Entrance Scheme

DESCRIBING the new 4-Star theatre in Grand Rapids, Mich., operated by B & J Theatres, Inc. Ownership of the 4-Star is equally divided between W. S. Butterfield Theatres, prominent Michigan circuit with headquarters in Detroit, and Allen Johnson of Grand Rapids. B & J Theatres was formed in 1936 for the operation of motion picture theatres in Grand Rapids, Eastown, Wealthy, Our, and Royal. The 4-Star plays day and date with the B & J theatres in Our and Eastown, showing first-run in neighborhood zones. The architect of the 4-Star was F. L. Proctor, Grand Rapids.

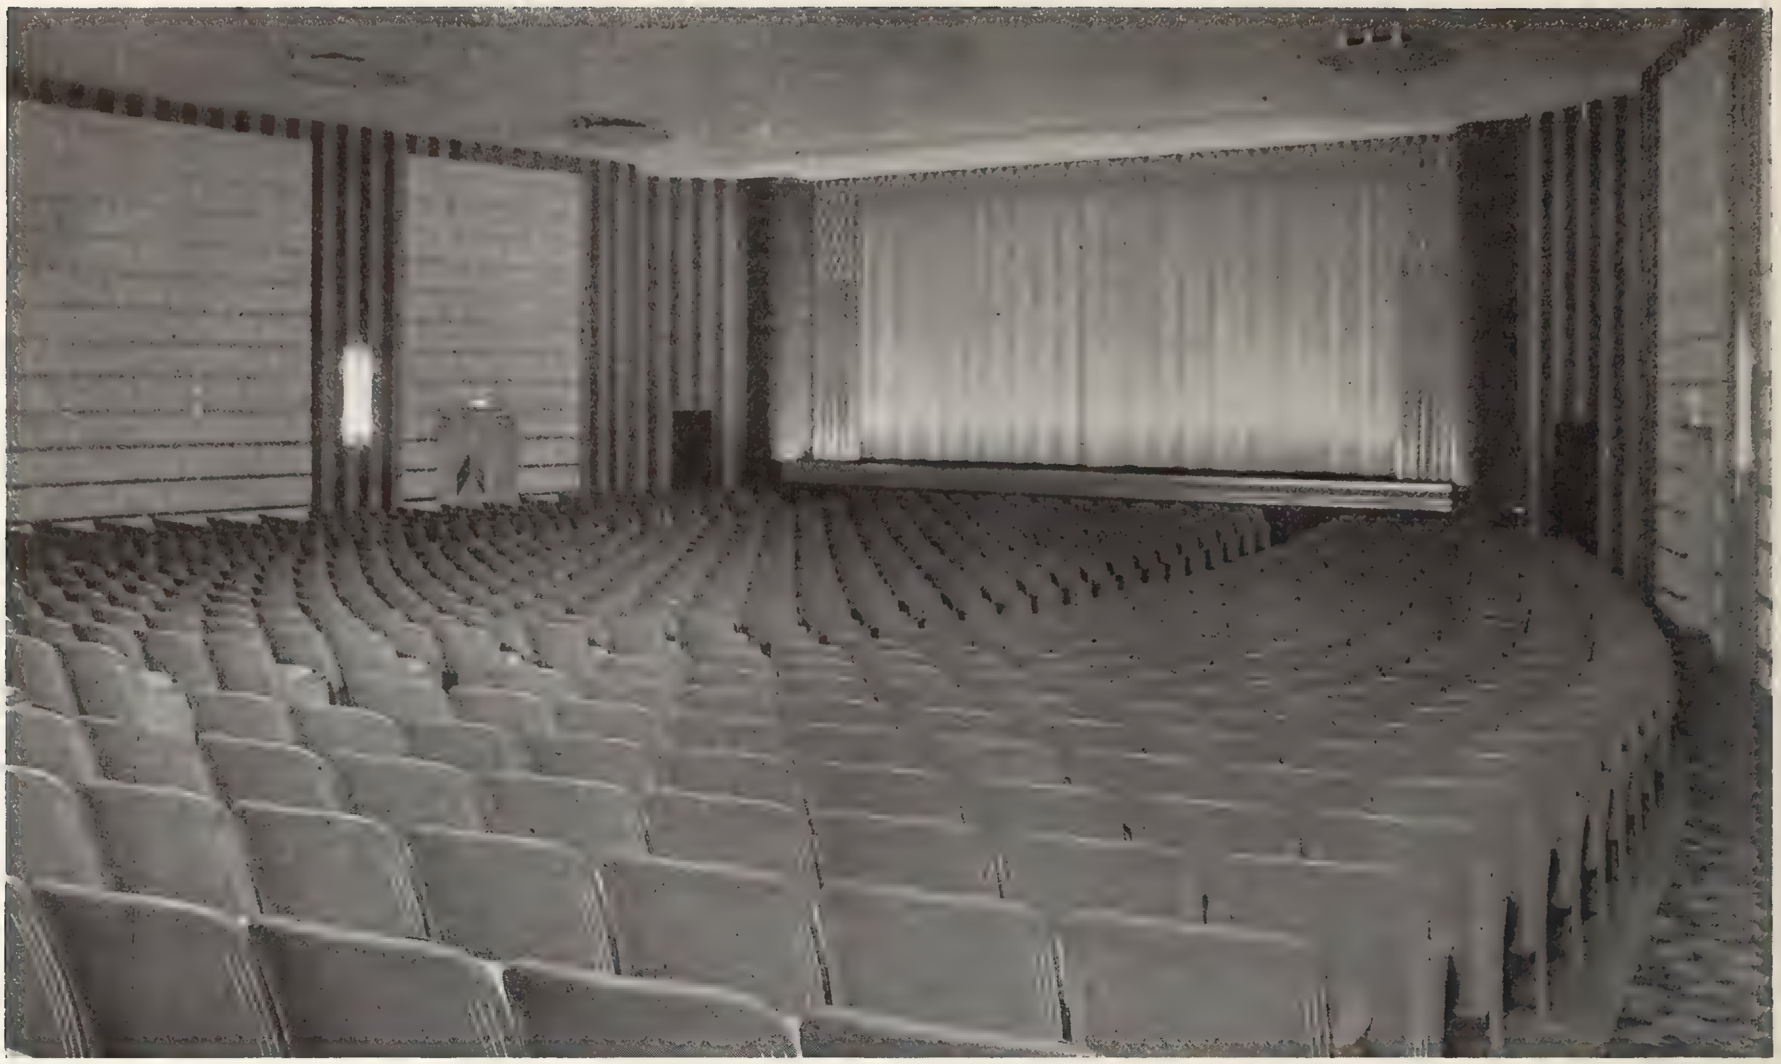
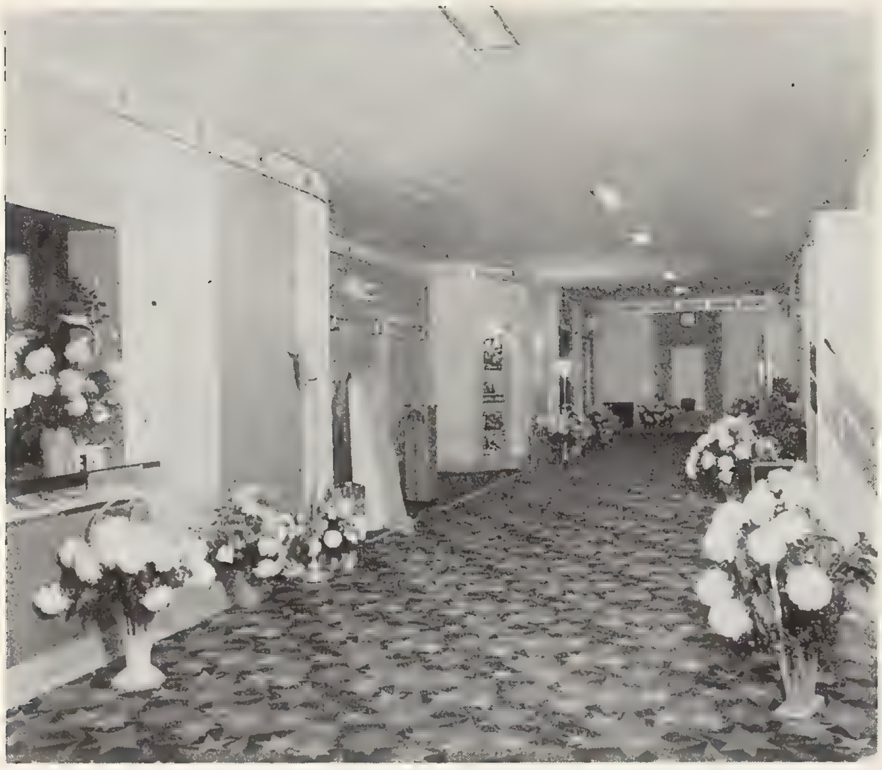
GENERAL PLAN: The Four-Star Theatre is built on an unusual plan in which there is no appreciable vestibule, with entrance directly into a carpeted foyer. The doors opening from the foyer again lead patrons into the auditorium. The functions of a vestibule are provided for by the fact that the street doors are recessed about four feet from the building line, and at the inside are recessed about three feet within the front wall of the lobby. The corresponding space at either side of the entrance doors is occupied by a stair hall, the ticket booth, a concession booth, a coat room and the manager's office, these facilities being arranged side by side along the theatre's front wall. The auditorium walls curve inward toward the stage opening, which is rectangular. There is no proscenium, but a stage of fair size is provided.

CONSTRUCTION: Construction is entirely of concrete, Haydite block and brick. All walls are concrete below grade; Haydite block faced with brick are used above. Side and rear walls are faced with construction brick. Smooth-surface face brick of two colors is used at the front, under a coping of gray face cement. The floor of the theatre is reinforced on precast concrete joists. Construction cost was $75,000, exclusive of equipment.

FRONT TREATMENT: The front of the theatre is designed to give the impression of width, with horizontal lines of darker brick interleaved with the buff-colored facing as high as the marquee. Above the marquee the construction of the wall involves repeated recesses from the center outward to the sides of the theatre, giving an effect of fluting which somewhat accentuates height. The marquee is triangular with a four-line attraction board at either side. At the center and extreme edges the attraction lines are continued in parallel rows of flashing incandescents. The name: "4 Star Theatre" rises above the marquee in neon, with a row of four five-pointed stars in superimposed in neon. The point of the marquee triangle, facing across the street, carries the initials of the owners, "B. J.", also in neon, and single neon tubes outline the top and bottom of the attraction boards. The general color scheme of the marquee is ivory and brown, with green trim. An outlet under either end provides for additional front lighting when required. The box office window is built into one wall of the theatre beside the entrance, and an alumilite weaterproof poster frame into the other. The front doors are bleached, veneered oak. The box office window is plate glass in an alumilite frame, with stainless steel deal plate. Ventilation is provided above the window to prevent an outward rush of air, on cold days, which might prove annoying at the speaking opening or blow money off deal plate.

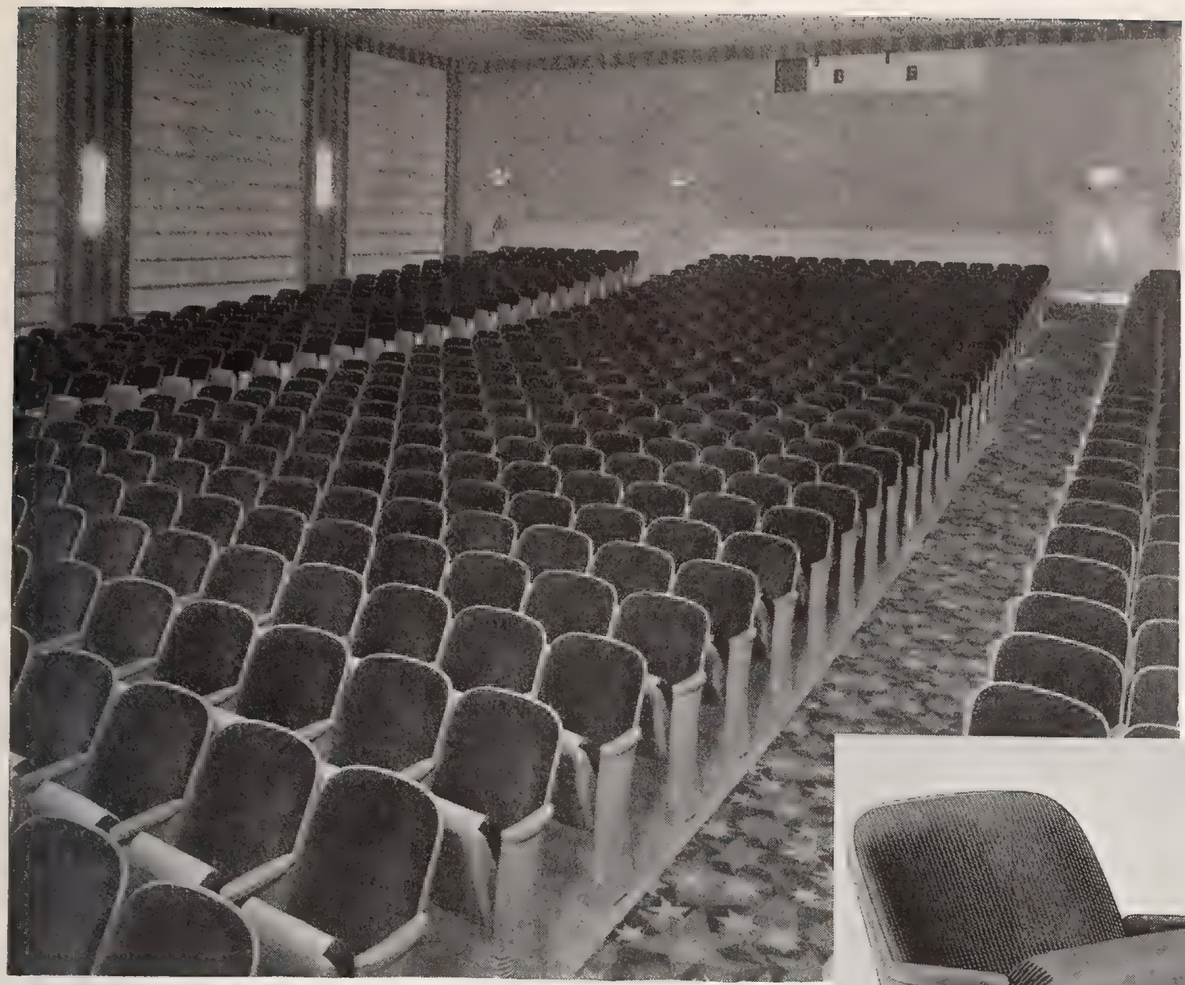


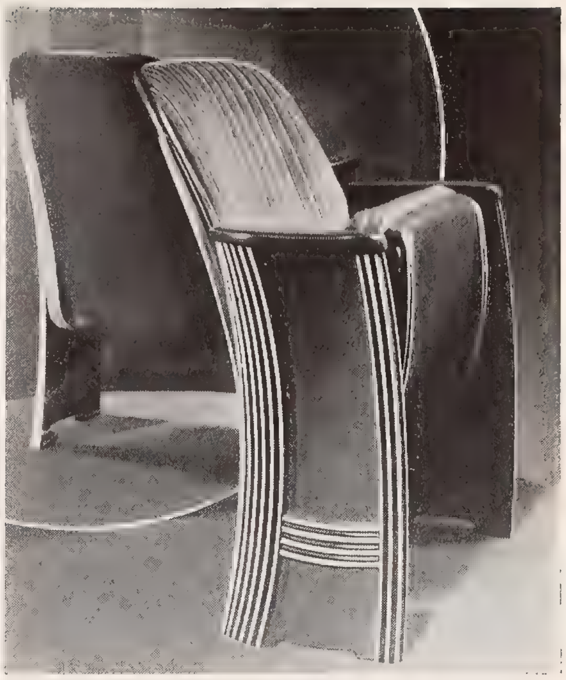


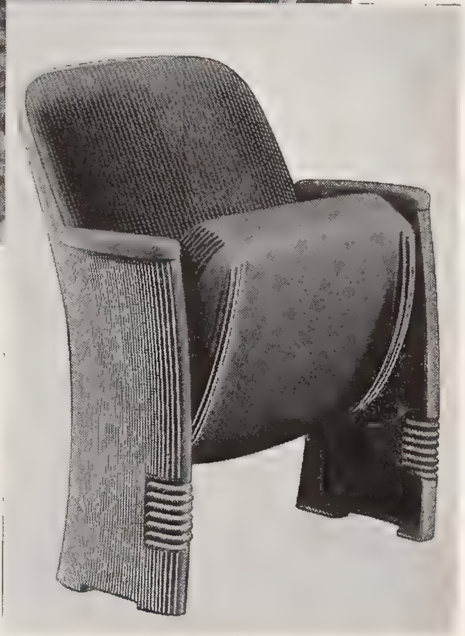
The most striking feature of the Four-Star foyer is its high pile Wilton carpet in dubonnet crowded with stars of two shades of gold, and high-lighted with two shades of turquoise green. This decorative effect is duplicated on the walls of the stair hall, but the lobby walls themselves have reeded plater surfaces, in a modern Swedish design, alternated with flat surfaces, and a color scheme in which ivory contrasts with turquoise green, dubonnet and violet. The frieze along the top of the lobby walls, however, carries gold diamonds that reproduce the effect of the gold stars in the carpet. The foyer ceiling colors are lighter shades of the wall colors. Foyer lighting is provided by flush ceiling fixtures of silver finish and ground glass, assisted by floor standards with ornamental ground glass shades and by lumline over the door to the ticket booth, over all poster frames and in the glass counter of the concession booth. A spotlight recessed in the ceiling is concentrated on a large mirror located between the auditorium doors, in which feminine patrons can check their appearance as they enter. There is also a recessed mirror above an ornamental fountain at one end.

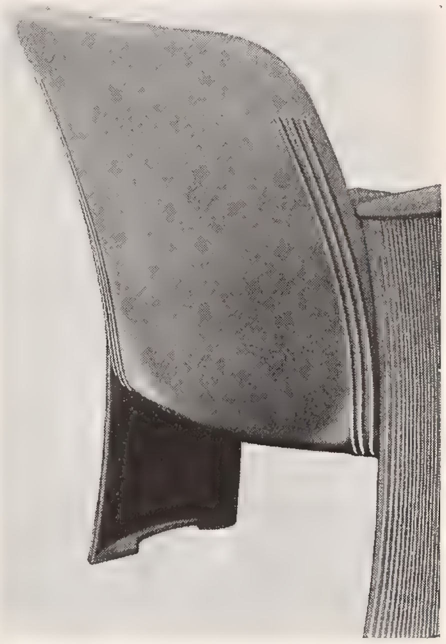
AUDITORIUM: The horizontal striping of the buff facade of the theatre is recalled in the ivory plaster panels of the auditorium walls, which are similarly striped with courses of Haydite brick in dubonnet. The stripes nearest the floor are dark in shade, but the color tone of the higher stripes becomes progressively lighter. Between the panels are pilasters of alternate vertical lines of light and dark dubonnet. The vertical striping of these pilasters spreads outward across the tops of the panels and constitutes a shallow decorative frieze between them and the ceiling. Where the side walls converge on the stage opening the panels give way entirely to the vertical striping of the pilasters. which in turn is replaced by two columns of curved Haydite block, these forming the sides of the stage opening. The valence and its side drapes are turquoise silk, with a diamond figure applique at the top of the drapes, and all along the width of the valence, recalling the diamond motive of the ceiling frieze in the lobby. The curtain, made of rayon and damask, contributes turquoise and ivory to the front-of-the-house color scheme. The ivory of the curtain reproduces the color to the ceiling, which is entirely of plaster, and without decorative treatment except for light dubonnet striping on the under sides of the air diffusers. The auditorium rear wall is rock wool, reinforced with mesh, mounted on furring and covered with monkscloth.

LIGHTING: Light is provided partly by reflection of the footlights from the curtain. Both white and colored bulbs are installed in the footlight trough. They are controlled by dimmers located in the projection room. Additional light is given by six side wall fixtures. These are tall and comparatively slender, and hence appropriately located in the vertical striping of the plasters. They are made of stainless steel and white ground glass. As in the case of the footlights, both white and colored bulbs are used, but the wall lights can be controlled, not alone from the projection room, but from the ticket box also.









SEATING: The chairs—of the new model recently brought out by the American Seating Company—introduce red cord mohair backs and coral and ivory leather seats into the auditorium color ensemble. The chairs are arranged in three banks between four aisles. The central group is fourteen chairs wide. The two side groups are nine chairs wide at the rear, but converge to a four-chair width in the extreme front row. The four aisles terminate, at the rear, in the four sets of doors leading from the lobby. Through these doors the much-starred lobby carpet is continued down the auditorium aisles. The two ivory wall panels located furthest front are broken by exit doors which lead, respectively, to a back alley and a side alley. In addition, the lobby itself is provided with two exits aside from the main doors, making a total of five means of egress in all.

AIR SUPPLY: The auditorium is provided fully conditioned air by a system which draws air through filters and tempering coils and introduces it through ceiling diffusers. It is exhausted at the front of the auditorium, and through supplementary ceiling exhausts which keep the interior pressure from becoming too high. Provision is made for recirculation, if desired. Cooilng is by means of well water. Aside from the auditorium the theatre is heated with Trane convectors, many of which are recessed and covered with plain grilles. Heat is obtained through a steam boiler and stoker.

PROJECTION: The projection room measures 11 feet x 19 feet, exclusive of an adjoining room which contains the rheostats and motor generators. Its walls are of Haydite, painted green. Floor and ceiling are cement. The angle of projection approximates 10 degrees, to a screen image measuring 20 feet x 13 feet. Equipment includes two Simplex projectors, Peerless Magnarc lamps, Simplex sound system and General Electric copper oxide rectifiers.

Above the American Seating Company chairs of the new model installed in the Four-Star theatre, are seen from several angles. The back of this chair is a single sheet of steel stamped to a body posture curvature and entirely free from tacks, screws or fastenings of any kind. This chair back is enamelled and streamlined to match the ornamentation and color scheme of the standards. This back descends somewhat lower than usual, while the seat, when raised, occupies a somewhat higher position than is customary. By virtue of this arrangement the rear of the seat does not extend below the back and so is not accessible to the feet of persons seated immediately behind. The underside of the seat is completely finished off and formed to adapt itself to shape and position of the legs when a patron stands to let another pass. The seat is self-lifting as far as three-quarter position and can be pressed back the rest of the way. Released from the full upward position, it drops back to the three-quarters position, or one calculated to enable the patron to force it down in sitting, without bringing it any farther forward by hand. The underside of the seat is finished off and modeled in a form and pattern similar to those of the back in appearance, and there is no exposed mechanism of any kind. Structural features of this chair include the use of bands of spring steel extending laterally at intervals across the full depth of the seat frame. These bands are fixed in position and of course cannot produce side sway. Wood is nowhere used as a structural element. Both the seat and the metal back are designed to be readily demountable.

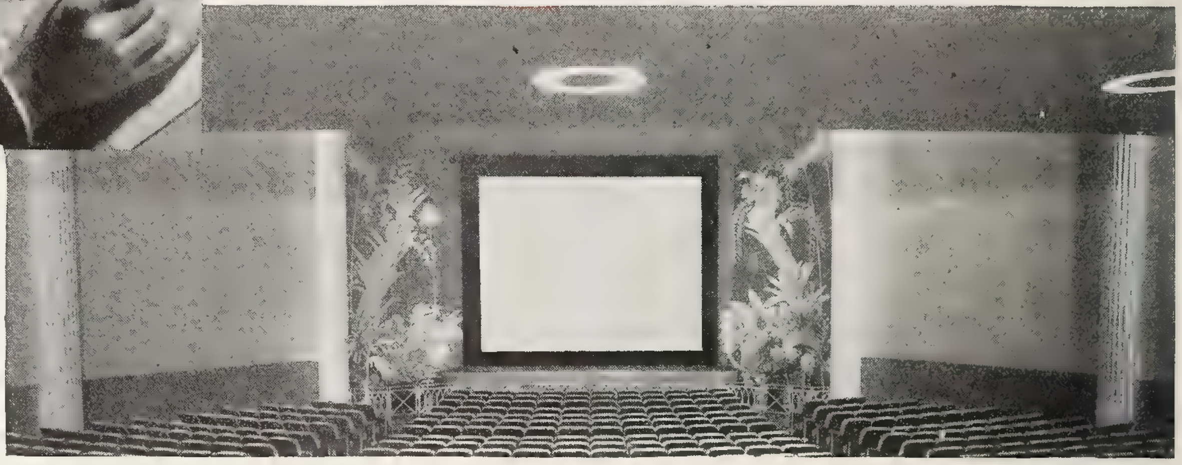
An interview with Charles C. Burton, architect recently become showman



Mr. Burton in his studio-office in the Paramount Building in New York—and at right, a couple of Burton ideas installed in the new Paramount theatre in Miami. The screen arrangement is one. Another is the balcony soffit lighting. The latter is simply spun metal bowls with a drop panel flush with the ceiling. These are on two circuits, with four 40-watt lamps to each circuit, one for blue lamps, which are burned during the performance; the other for white light at show breaks.

JUST ABOUT the first thing a person connected with the motion picture theatre business is likely to get out of Charlie Burton is a smilingly presented question to this effect: "What do you think of this scheme?"

Then he'll tell you of a lighting arrangement, or a screen masking method, or an air-conditioning plan that you never heard of before. You may think, at first, that you never want to hear of it again. But you'll probably wonder later why you didn't think of that one yourself!

When Charles C. Burton went to work for the Paramount Theatre Service Corporation in 1936, it was as an architect to handle design details under J. T. Knight, Jr., nationally known theatre engineer then in charge, as he had been for many years, of physical operations and maintenance for the vast Paramount organization of twelve or thirteen hundred directly owned and affiliated theatres. But since Mr. Knight's departure, early in 1938, for another field, Paramount's extensive modernization program, still in full swing, has been in Mr. Burton's hands. Going up to his office high above Times Square for a chat with him the other day, we found ideas lying all over the place, and missing few, very few, departments of the theatre. Physically, Charlie Burton is something above medium height, and sturdily built. He's almost always smiling when he talks.

"Except for those architects who have been specializing in motion picture theatres for a considerable period of time, the designer not closely associated with theatre operation may not get the 'feel' of the theatre in a really practical way." This was in answer to our opening question, which referred to possible changes in his point of view as an architect now that he was "on the inside." His reply continued:

"The architect must have some feeling for showmanship, must realize perfectly the underlying reason for the building he is designing and that the finished theatre should not be costly to operate. In modernizing many of our theatres, we have been able to reduce operating costs. A goodly number of the theatres built some ten or fifteen years ago must have been tough on the maintenance budget!"

Modern Design Economical

Then he found that modern design and materials contributed to economical operation. "Yes, definitely. But a basic factor is the detailed planning."

"Incidentally," he went on, "there is a certain amount of confusion about the so-called modern style. The modernistic idea created a sort of passion for originality which ended only in the proliferation of a lot of absurdly complex decorative schemes. Fundamentally, beauty remains pretty much the same. A new idea, you know, may be quite as bad as an old one."

This from a man to whom new ideas are as necessary as food and air!

"I'm talking about fundamentals," he explained. "Certainly we want new schemes—when they conform to basic truths and serve new purposes efficiently."

Here Mr. Burton paused and his smile began to broaden. He leaned forward on the desk. "Of course, efficiency isn't always obvious. I'll tell you what I have done in some theatres to get an atmosphere of light-heartedness, which I think a theatre should invariably have. I used extremely light colors everywhere. Recently a theatre manager said to me, 'If we use that light colored material on the seats I'll never be able to keep them clean.' I replied, 'I hope you'll have to clean those seats every day, which would mean that you had people sitting in them.' The important thing to me was the cheery effect the light material gave the auditorium, and it is a small matter to have a staff man use a little bubble cleaner regularly to keep the fabric clean. Such materials are out of the question for theatres in some sections, of course, but in high-class neighborhood and suburban houses they are desirable and worth a little extra maintenance effort."

We reminded him of his earlier reference to the relationship between design and operating costs.

"As I pointed out, it's a matter of details, to a great extent. I'll give you an example.

"I recently had a theatre in the South to remodel that was used entirely for pictures, but which had an unusually large stage. I found that the management was paying high rental for space in a building across the street for the use of an art department serving the entire circuit. I also discovered that two electricians were employed because of the stage-union rules. It was decided to sound-proof the stage and use that space for the art department. Then control of the lighting system was removed to the front of the house—and the two stage electricians were no longer needed. These changes saved about $8,000 a year. There are other instances in which substitution of materials, revising of lighting systems, and so on, have cut as much as 30% from the cost of operation.

"Another item that causes some unnecessary expense is drapes. I have found that in a majority of cases they require constant cleaning. In all of the theatres I have been renovating, drapes have been eliminated throughout. In some instances the managers kicked—they had got so used to seeing drapes at exits and other doorways that they couldn't bear to see them go. In some cases I have even eliminated the screen curtain. In a continuous house the screen is exposed enough to get dirty pretty rapidly, anyway, and it is my policy to recommend installation of a new screen each year."

New Tricks in Lighting

Had he been using the new fluorescent lamps?

"Yes, in various ways. I am using them exclusively for attraction board lighting. The initial installation cost is a little more than for regular lamps, but over a period of time the saving in current makes the fluorescent lamp twice as economical. In one case I used an alabaster base, about three and a half feet high, around the box office and placed fluorescent lamps of various colors behind the translucent base. The box office is at the sidewalk line, and by burning only a few downlights in the marquee soffit an effect is gotten which makes people stop and look. The fluorescent lamps behind the box office base can be changed to vary the color scheme."

And so the ideas flowed on, with only a bit of spurring now and then from the interviewer. Marquee design:

"Very simple. Instead of filling the soffit with lamps, I am using downlights exclusively. By placing these on several different circuits it is possible to burn only a portion of the lamps, as needed. There should definitely be plenty of light under the marquee, but I am against filling the soffit with lamps to the point of glare."

Lounges:

"In some theatres where lounge space has been small, I have used mirrors on the side walls from the top of the baseboard to the ceiling, and by using cove lighting and a carpet that carries good 'weight' in appearance, an effect of spaciousness was achieved—at least the lounge doesn't look cramped."

And then Charlie Burton said, "By the way, what do you think of this stunt?" And he told us about a scheme to give the cashier control of the air-conditioning system, adjusting operation according to the number of patrons going in. . . . Well, we'll wait until that one is installed!

OBSERVATIONS

of the editor

A-GOIN' TO TH' THEAYTER AND A-STAYIN' RIGHT AT HOME, AS PAT WOULD SAY

THE RADIO comedians get fabulous pay for dusting off the old ones, but we're not asking anything extra for this: Pat and Mike (remember?) were discussing the marvels of Science. "Yes, Pat," said Mike, "sure'n 'tis a wonderful age we're a-livin' in. Take the horseless carriage, now!" "And the fireless cooker," contributed Pat. "Yur right indade," agreed Mike, "And I'm just afther readin' how some day we'll be a-flyin', like a blasted bir-rd, Pat." Pat thought a moment. "It don't seem right atall we should be tryin' t'ape the bir-rds, Mike," he finally replied. "That's goin' too far. But I'm tellin' yuh phwat we shall be a-doin,' Mike. Take this here tellyphone. Why, Mike, it won't be but soon and you'll be able t'go a-visitin' and stay right at home!" . . . Maybe that ain't the way you "heerd it," but that's the way it comes back to me as I reflect on a chat I had the other day about television. As Pat would put it, "Take this here tellyvision, Mike! Why, soon people'll be a-goin' to th' theayter and a-stayin' right at home!"

"But," my friend said over the lunch table—and he's an electrical engineer of considerable experience in both the radio and the theatre field—"people don't want to stay home. Part of the fun, the stimulation, of going to the theatre comes from getting out of the house. Man is gregarious—he likes to get out among his fellow beings. And he also gets tired of the same things, the same places, even his home. You see people all the time going to taverns and other amusement places to do the very things that they can do much more cheaply at home."

He made another shrewd observation that had not occurred to me, but the psychology which will ever prevent home pursuits from being more of a competitor with outside amusements than they normally are, was familiar. Yet it is all too often lost sight of in the theatre business these days, when developments in television are being watched as the emerging features of a flame-splitting "cinemivorous" monster.

Even technically, these developments do not justify any shudders as yet. They were surveyed in Better Theatres in the October issue, and now, in Guy Bartlett's summary of the electrical industry in 1938, written for the January issue of the General Electric Review, appears this paragraph: "It is easy to recall how limited the 'silent' motion pictures were in comparison with present ones appealing to hearing as well as sight, and it may well be that, perhaps in ten or twenty years, sound broadcasting alone will appear equally limited. There are, however, several important distinctions between the problem of adding sound to pictures and the problem of adding sight to broadcasting. It is perhaps sufficient to mention that the frequency band required to broadcast a moving picture [televised film] in a reasonably good manner is about 1,000 times as wide as is the frequency band necessary to broadcast the accompanying sound; and it is also approximately correct to say that the present difficulties and costs of broadcasting sight bear a somewhat similar ratio to present difficulties and costs of broadcasting sound." In other words, television, with a miniature image of little dramatic conviction, limited in scope of action, devoid of detail or pictorial beauty, costs a thousands times more than present radio broadcasting!

But back to my luncheon chat with the engineer, and his other observation. He said, "A good deal of the time, perhaps with only the exception of a few specific programs each week, people merely half-listen to the radio. They turn it on—then read the paper or a novel, play bridge, talk, work around the house—occasionally fall asleep in the chair. You don't have to concentrate on a radio program. With television, however, you must keep your eyes glued to the image. How often, and for what length of time, do you think people will do that?" . . . Well, what's your guess?

the capacity of such equipment, are necessary for the removal of this latent heat, accomplished by condensing the excess moisture out of the air.

This comparison of the amounts of air needed to handle winter and summer conditions illustrates the principle that in designing an air distributing system for year-round comfort, the system must be designed and sized on the basis of summer air requirements, and that reductions in air volume must be made during the winter season.

Sizes and Forms of Duct Systems

AIR DISTRIBUTING systems should be constructed of material which offers the least possible resistance to the flow of air. Any resistance requires additional power and contributes to high operating costs. Care in designing duct systems must be exercised so that friction is not increased due to sharp corners around which air must move, or improperly designed fittings like reducers or transformations.

A given quantity of air will move through a round duct and require less power than the same quantity of air through a square duct of equivalent capacity, and where possible, the round variety should certainly be used. Also, the round type is much more easily insulated with the cheaper forms of insulating material. A properly designed duct will be quiet and the air will move through it at greater velocities without creating any noise.

Small Duct Factors

Various factors contribute to the possibility of smaller ducts. One is increased velocity of air movement, which means that a smaller duct will carry the same volume of air at higher velocity. Other reductions in duct sizes are made possible through the handling of air having a greater temperature difference. For example, a larger quantity of air can be handled if it is cooled 30° lower in temperature than if cooled only 20° lower. Greater temperature differences in return and supply air, and higher velocities, are possible only when careful consideration is given to the type of air outlet or diffusing device—one that will permit draftless air movement and yet maintain even temperatures.

Introduction of Cold Air

Cold air is quite heavy and falls very rapidly, and unless introduced at a high point in the conditioned area, or at a high velocity, it will cause an unnatural air movement tending to create drafts and uneven temperature conditions. If the air is quite cold, it is desirable to introduce it as high as possible in the conditioned area in order that it mix thoroughly with the air already in the conditioned space before dropping to occupancy level. This will permit the air to be introduced at low velocity and therefore quietly, since too high a velocity is conducive to air noise, and under certain conditions may be of such intensity as to be objectionable. Where it is impossible to introduce the air at a high point in the conditioned area, high velocity is necessary in order to create a secondary air motion whereby the room air is mixed with the air being introduced into the room. The size of the grille or opening determines the velocity with which the air is introduced into a room.

Air Diffusing Devices

Grilles, of course, are usually designed so that the direction of the air in the vertical as well as the horizontal plane can be controlled, thus they provide a uniform distribution in the area adjacent to the grilles. Uniform distribution makes possible uniform temperature. Several circular air distributing devices have recently been placed on the market which reduce the air velocity entering the room to as much as 1/20th of the velocity of that in the duct, and at the same time mix in large quantities of room air with the supply air to assist in perfect distribution and perfect temperature control.

These devices make it possible to use still smaller duct sizes, permitting in many cases very high air velocities in the air distributing ducts and permitting greater temperature differences between room air and supply air due to thorough mixing. In many cases it is possible by the use of these devices to have supply air quite low in temperature and considerably below the dew point of the air in the conditioned area. Any condensation caused at the outlet by the use of air much lower in dew point than the air in the conditioned space, is re-evaporated by the use of these devices. This permits a still greater temperature difference in supply and return air, contributing to still smaller duct sizes and thereby lowering first costs and insuring continued savings in lower operating costs.

Too much attention cannot be paid to proper air distribution. Money spent in obtaining the services of an engineer skilled in the art of air distribution is money saved many times over. Such an engineer will pay particular attention to what is known as the volumetric split—that is, the distribution of a given quantity of air of a definite temperature in a certain area of the conditioned space according to the volume of that conditioned space and the total heat to be supplied or removed from the conditioned space. He will also pay particular attention to the velocity of the air and the direction of the air flow—so that it won't be conflicting with other streams of air or impinge on objects such as lighting fixtures, columns or beams, and thereby become deflected in such a way as to cause drafts and uneven temperature conditions. The theatre operator can save as much as 30% in the total cost of an installation by making sure the air is effectively distributed. This saving in first cost is supplemented by a marked saving in operating cost.

Storage Lowers Cost of Cooling

FURTHER extension of storage refrigeration in such installations of air-conditioning as those in theatres, is indicated for 1939. A means of reducing operating costs by adjustment of equipment operation to general power demands, storage refrigeration receives notable mention by Margaret Ingeles, M. E., technical editor of the Carrier Corporation, in a review of air-conditioning developments during the past year. To quote Miss Ingels:

"Because the air-conditioning equipment operates only during a small portion of the twenty-four hour day and not every day of the year, the power consumed is only a fraction of the connected load. In order to obtain a more favorable power load factor, which will work to the advantage of both the power company and the consumer, air-conditioning and refrigerating engineers are designing systems with this phase of the problem in mind.

"To appreciate the magnitude of the power problem, it is interesting to note an observation made by Dr. Willis H. Carrier. In 1932 the estimated horsepower of air-conditioning equipment for 1948 was 2,550,000 horsepower. With the experience gained in 1938, the estimated power load for 1948 has been revised to 11,350,000 h.p.

"Apparatus in many large installations includes storage water equipment so that the refrigeration, operating at off-peak times, will cool water to be used during peak load periods. On such installations, the refrigeration machines may be turned off for long periods, or only one machine kept in operation according to design conditions. One installation in the Midwest is a 100% storage system, power being used only at night when the off-peak rate prevails."

Of great significance to the theatre field, too, among activities of the air-conditioning industry during 1938—a year marked by major attention to the development of store, office and residential units—was the perfection of the evaporative condenser, which meets to a substantial degree the growing problem of water shortage found in many cities.

Cites Condensers for Capacity Modification

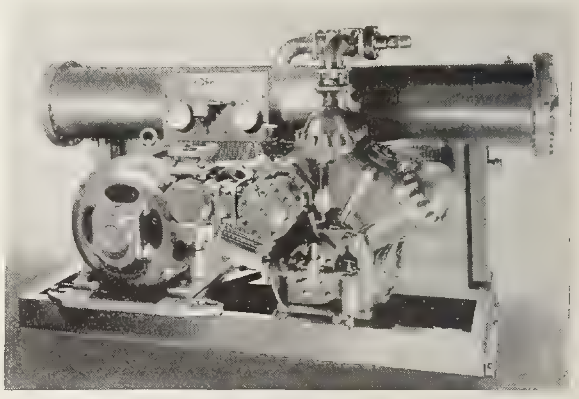
Among the types of equipment discussed by Guy Bartlett in a survey of General Electric developments in 1938, written for the January issue of the General Electric Review, are accessories also representing efforts to reduce operating costs of central air-conditioning plants where the load has considerable variation. Such equipment was made available in sizes from 15 to 50 horsepower, and according to Mr. Bartlett, with employment of the "cylinder cut-off" principle, there is "practically no reduction of efficiency with reduction of output—with half the cylinders cut out, the capacity is approximately 53% of full-unit capacity and the power input is only 60% of full-load input."

His review cites further augmentation of the line of central air-conditioning plant equipment so that it now includes eight basic sizes, covering a range of cooling capacities from about 18,000 to 592,000 Btu's per hour, heating capacities from 45,000 to 1,544,000 Btu's per hour, and humidifying capacities from 9 to 192 pounds of water per hour as standard rating conditions.

Two of the smaller units, one new, the other redesigned, are constructed in three sections to give flexibility of application and reduce installation expense. The central section houses the heat transfer elements and the humidifier; piping connections can be made to either side of the unit; and motors are available for all regular power sources, with several choices of speeds. For 60-cycles operation, a variable, adjustable-speed motor is also available to permit adjustment of air-flow according to the specific duct pressure. Heat transfer elements, employing either cold water or a refrigerant for cooling, and either steam or hot water for heating, are available for each basic size of unit.

Compressor for Elevated Location

LIGHT IN weight, and with low headroom requirements, a new compressor of capacity suited to even the larger theatres, has been developed by the York Ice Machinery Corporation specifically for installation in locations above basement levels where vibration would otherwise be an adverse factor unless special foundations for the equipment were provided.



Employing Freon-12, this type is available in units of 40, 50 and 60 horsepower. Compressor and motor, with V-belt drive, are assembled in combination with the condenser on a structural steel base, complete with discharge connections between the compressor and the condenser, instruments, and high and low pressure protection. It is equipped with the York "Partial By-Pass Capacity" control for manual operation, but provisions for automatic operation are available.

LIGHT

FOR VISION DECORATION AND SELLING

"... light is a first tool of showmanship."

The Fluorescent Lamp Allows Lower Cooling Plant Load

THE EFFICIENCY of the fluorescent lamp is seen by illuminating engineers as an economy factor in the operation of air-conditioning systems. Because of the great reduction in wattage permitted for the production of the same amount of light, the heat introduced by the light sources is reduced to a corresponding degree.

In The Magazine of Light, published by the Nela Park organization of General Electric, Walter Sturrock of that company says:

"Since the general acceptance of the science of seeing, lighting engineers have been accustomed to specify lighting on the basis of the requirements of the seeing task to be performed rather than according to some arbitrary rule of thumb. In other words, the minimum number of footcandles needed determines the watts per square foot rather than vice versa. When a predetermined level of illumination is provided by the new lamps, the heat from the lighting, which is always a considerable factor in the refrigeration load, is only about half what it would be with a conventional system using incandescent lamps. Thus it becomes possible to design the air-conditioning system for lower capacity and to operate it more economically. It is a case in which everyone gains. The customer is able to avail himself of the advantages of air-conditioning which before seemed too expensive, and he gets these advantages at no sacrifice in the quantity or quality of the illumination in his building."

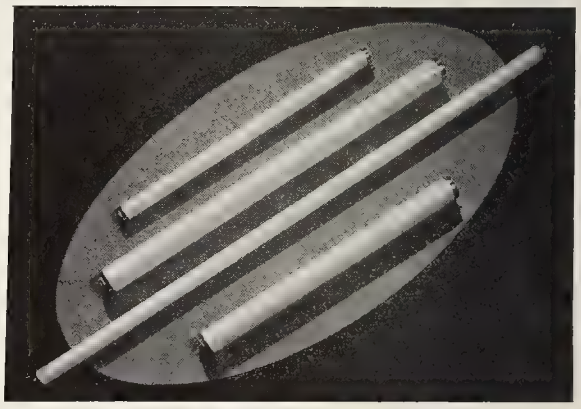
Mr. Sturrock points out, however, that the air-conditioning system ought to be designed with allowance made for cooling capacity that might be required by future changes in the lighting scheme. The fluorescent lamp, of course, permits bringing up present light levels without imposing a greater burden upon an existing air-conditioning system, or demanding from it a cooling capacity that it cannot deliver.

1938 Developments In Theatre Lamps

THE FLUORESCENT lamp not only brought to the entire field of illumination in 1938, a light source of revolutionary character, but gave the theatre an illuminant uniquely adapted to it for a number of applications. The effect of its efficiency on summer cooling has been noted. With respect to illumination alone, it is particularly significant to the theatre as the first really efficient source of colored light. A discussion of the characteristics and applications of the fluorescent lamp leads the latest annual review of lighting developments issued by the Nela Park engineering department of General Electric, written by Robert W. Morris and covering advances made in all fields of lighting (except the neon industry) in 1938. Following are excerpts from Mr. Morris' review of interest in theatre operation.

Fluorescent Lamps

"The lamps are electric discharge sources since they depend upon low-pressure mercury arcs to produce ultra-violet radiation which activates the fluorescent chemicals with which the inside surfaces of the tubes are coated. These chemicals or 'phosphors' as they are termed may be considered energy transformers which step the invisible ultraviolet radiation down to the visible part of the spectrum. The phosphors tend to give a more continuous spectrum than is supplied by most gaseous sources, for the energy which they step down is not radiated as a single line but as a broad band in the pink or green or blue or whatever the color may be. Proper selecting and blending of the phosphors makes it possible to produce radiation in practically any desired part or parts of the spectrum. This permits the production of colored light by the additive method in hitherto unobtainable pastel tints as well as in pure colors."



Fluorescent lamps in the various available sizes

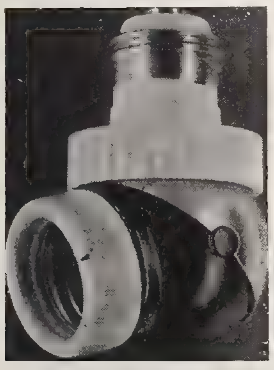
Projector and Reflector Lamps

Among other types of light sources discussed by Mr. Morris, of some application to the theatre are the projector (not for projection) and reflector lamps developed in 1938 (both of which have been described in previous issues of Better Theatres). To review the characteristics of these lamps briefly:

The projector lamp, so-called because it directs the light, has a sealed-in reflector, a lens plate fused with the other elements as an integral part of the lamp, and a 150-watt filament. Two types are available—one directing light in a 25° beam, for spotlight work (such as lobby and theatre front posters); the other with a beam spread great enough for floodlighting. Since the reflector is sealed in, this lamp is adapted to outdoor applications without provisions for protection from the weather.

The reflector lamp is similar in light distribution characteristics, but it requires protection from rain and snow. It is accordingly cheaper than the other.

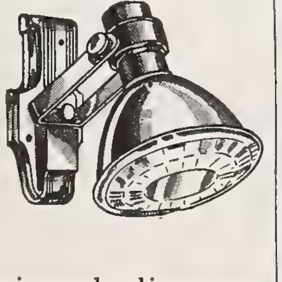
Angle Adapter for Projector Lamp



FOR THE PURPOSE of flexibly applying the new projector and reflector lamps to the spotlighting of displays, as well as floodlighting, an "angle-adapter" socket device has been developed by the Bridgeport, Conn., appliance department of General Electric.

This adapter is designed for insertion into any regular electric light socket, and the lamp socket element is hinged. Cupped over a spherical member, the hinged element moves firmly against it and may be made rigid at any point by tightening the hinge screw. This permits a vertical adustment through an arc of 70°. Horizontal direction is also adjustable.

Stand or Bracket Adapter with Filters



Another adapter for the projector and reflector lamps is one which has socket elements, with extension cord, hinged on a U-shaped member, which in turn is attached to a base of sufficient weight to act as a stand, and which may also be screwed to a vertical surface. The socket hinge provides vertical adjustment, the base swivel permits horizontal adjustment.

For use with this adapter, which has been marketed in the theatre field by the National Theatre Supply Company, are color filters which slip into rims that clip over the lens of the lamp. The filters are of heat-resisting glass and are available in red, amber, green and blue. Both adapter and filter rims are of chromium-plated metal.

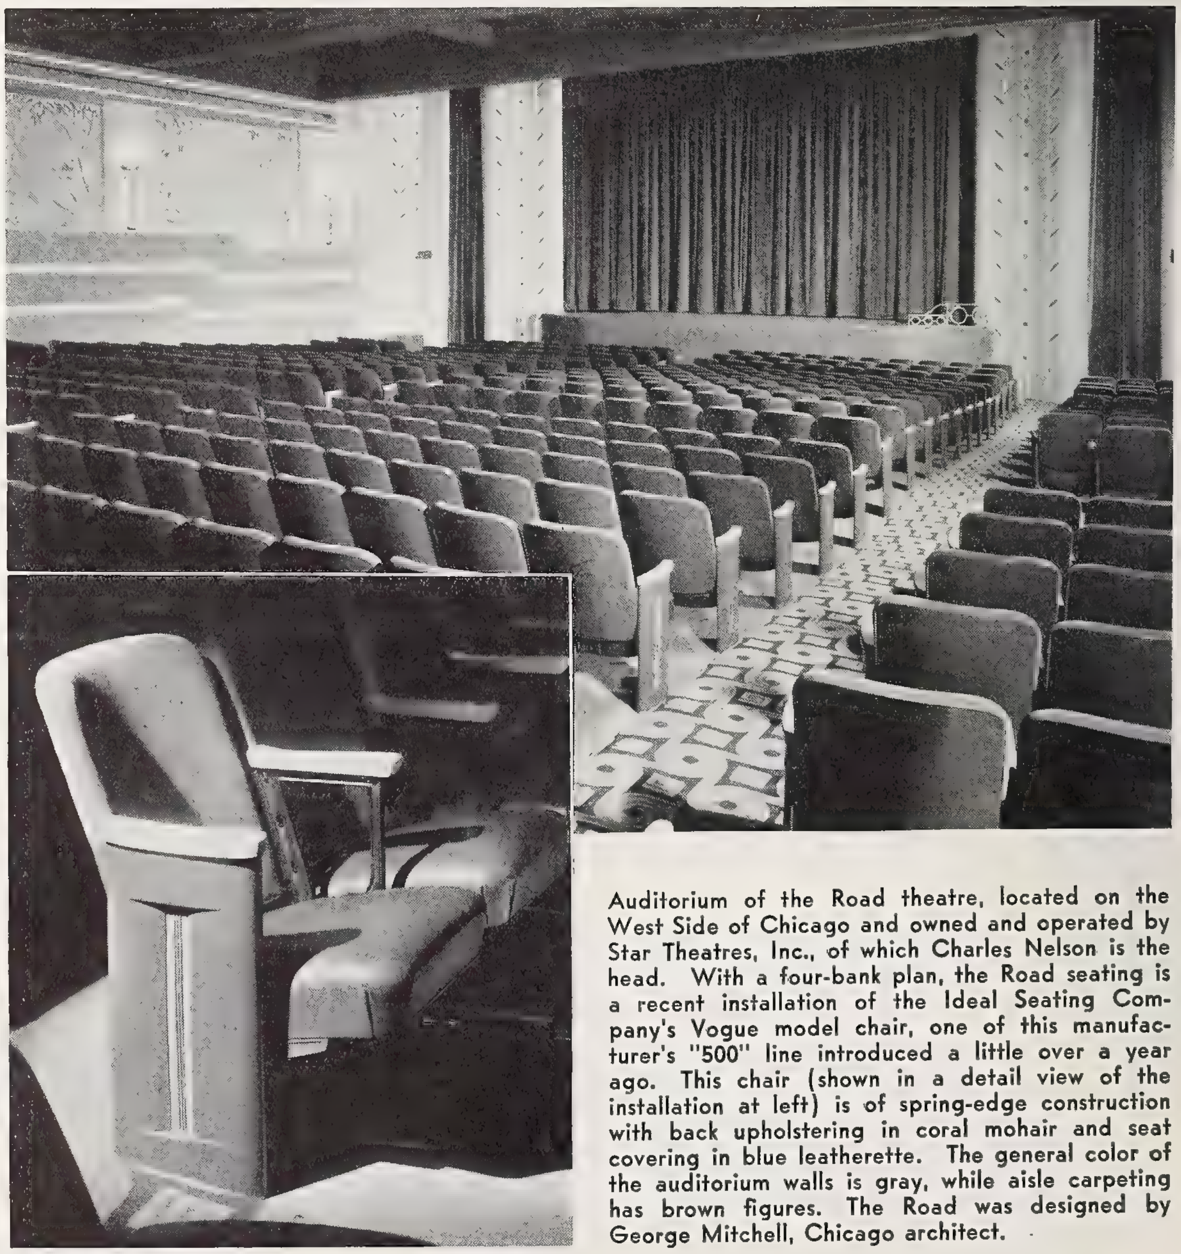
". . . no theatre can be better than its seating."

Rubber Cushion Construction for Theatre Seating

AFTER CONSIDERABLE discussion in the public seating industry, and general adoption of the method for busses, the rubber cushion, dispensing with spring and related construction, is being marketed in the American theatre field. There have been few actual theatre installations in this country. In England, however, the rubber cushion has had extensive usage in theatres for several years.

While the rubber material employed varies according to manufacturer, characteristic features are great resilience with sufficient firmness to prevent sidesway. Durability is also one of the attributes usually stressed. Rubber cushioning, however, is higher in cost than seats of spring and fibre-padding construction. In England, where experience with this type of seat construction lends weight to such comment, opinion generally is that the rubber is not conducive to perspiring and attendant soiling of fabric. In the United States, manufacturers of bus seating employing rubber cushions are of similar opinion, and those among them who also make theatre seating regard the comfort qualities entirely equal to the demands of the motion picture auditorium under all but exceptional conditions.

With respect to durability, those in the theatre seating industry who have had experience with the rubber cushion are in general of the opinion that it is likely to deteriorate far more slowly than other parts of the chair, especially the fabric. Renewal of the fabric is, of course, quite as readily accomplished as with other kinds of seat construction. In consideration of these factors, its effect of increasing the initial cost of new auditorium is substantially minimized.



Auditorium of the Road theatre, located on the West Side of Chicago and owned and operated by Star Theatres, Inc., of which Charles Nelson is the head. With a four-bank plan, the Road seating is a recent installation of the Ideal Seating Company's Vogue model chair, one of this manufacturer's "500" line introduced a little over a year ago. This chair (shown in a detail view of the installation at left) is of spring-edge construction with back upholstering in coral mohair and seat covering in blue leatherette. The general color of the auditorium walls is gray, while aisle carpeting has brown figures. The Road was designed by George Mitchell, Chicago architect.

Sound Trouble-Shooting Charts

6. DISTORTION

By AARON NADELL

THE PRESENT installment of these charts terminates the treatment of individual items of sound equipment. The charts to follow in the future will deal with the sound system as a whole, and will for the most part go only so far as to trace the isolation of trouble to a definite apparatus unit. From that point the charts already printed, including those given below, will apply.

The present charts are used in exactly the same way as their predecessors of the series, and like them are arranged with a view to giving the quickest possible relief. Things that are generally easiest to do, or most likely to prove successful, are listed first. More difficult or less hopeful measures are postponed.

These charts also (like all that preceded or will follow them) must be taken only as general guides, not as infallible rules. They should be modified as individual equipment peculiarities may indicate.

THEY PLANNED AHEAD FOR YOU

In 1934 a group of engineers looked into the future of the motion picture industry. They were planning a copper oxide rectifier for projection service. The foremost thought in their minds was that you fellows must be freed from the fear of frequent design changes if you are to buy the equipment you need.

The result of this careful planning was the conservatively-designed G-E Copper Oxide Rectifier for Motion Picture Projection Service.

Its designers gave you the 3-unit transformer for greater efficiency. They remembered that you wanted a minimum of operating noise and heat, so they provided for it. A remote control system was added to enable the rectifier to be controlled from the lamp pedestal. Control of the rectifier was so simplified that the simple opening and closing of the 110-volt control circuit was sufficient to start the blower motor, close the relays, and automatically connect the 3-phase line to the transformer.

Today that G-E Copper Oxide is the same rectifier. The single major change was the division of the unit into two parts for your convenience in handling and installation.

The story will be the same in the future. You can buy with confidence now, because changes will be few. It was "right" to begin with. That's what counts.

COMMENT ON PROJECTION AFFAIRS and answers to inquiries . . .

By F. H. RICHARDSON

TRUE THEN, TRUE NOW— "BETTER PROJECTION PAYS"

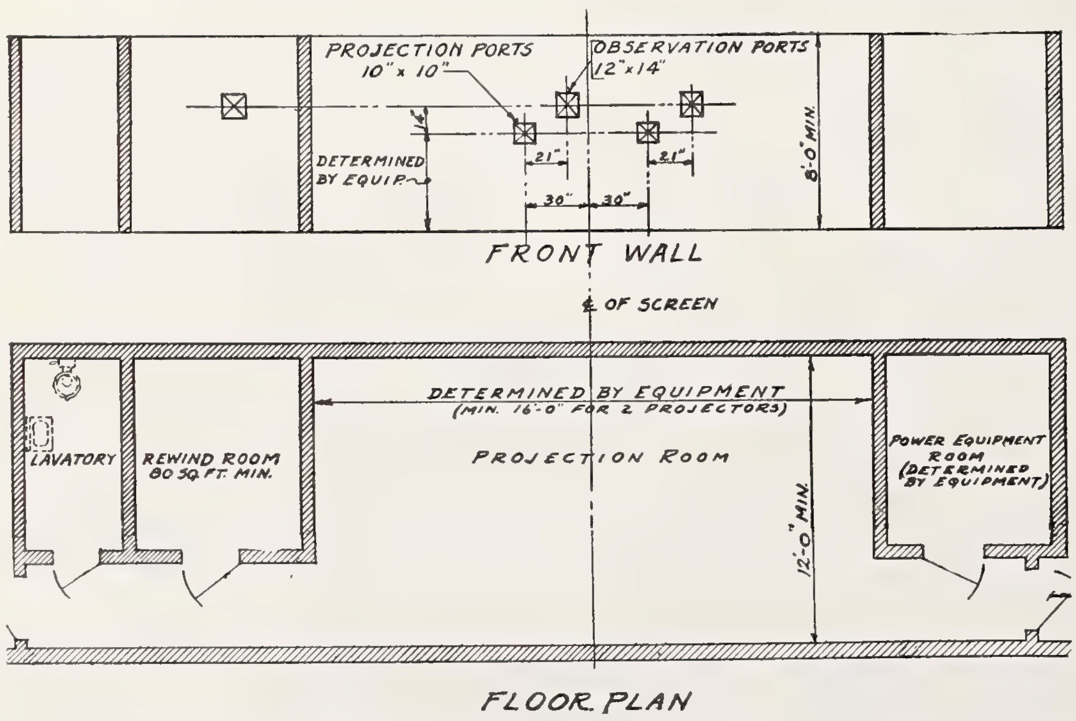
EXAMINATION OF files of BETTER THEATRES will disclose the fact that for years it featured the slogan "Better Projection Pays" in its projection department. If memory serves me correctly, it also was featured in the projection department of the old Moving Picture World before that publication was consolidated with MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

In days now hidden by the mists of years, when our great industry was in process of formation, the value of expert work in projection was but little understood, even by the men engaged therein. That one who was able to trim an arc lamp in some fashion, splice a film (usually in some pretty awful fashion), thread a film into a projector mechanism somewhere near properly and attend to a few other chores, was declared to be a "moving picture machine operator." The only examination to which he was subjected concerned the amount of monetary reward demanded.

Years upon years of heart-breaking patient, persistent work were required to alter this set-up to any appreciable degree. As a battle cry, so to speak, the slogan "Better Projection Pays" was hit upon (though not by me). Its value was immediately recognized and we proceeded to popularize it by constant use in the projection department. Unquestionably it did much to direct attention to the value of projection excellence for the reason that the eyes of exhibitors and theatre managers are in the very nature of things, focused upon box office income, hence when it was assumed that expert work in projection affected box office income favorably, those eyes were switched to that possibility with a jerk that, I believe, was fairly painful.

"Better Projection Pays" is not mere play upon words. It is true statement of fact, as is made evident the moment its effect be studied over a period of time. Accordingly, it is just as apt today as ever it was.

BETTER PROJECTION PAYS.



Functional diagram of revised SMPE projection room layout for two projectors. See accompanying discussion.

THE REVISED SMPE PROJECTION ROOM PLAN

AT THE FALL meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers the Projection Practice Committee turned in a voluminous report in which the entire projection room lay-out, as approved in its 1935 report, was overhauled and many changes and refinements suggested. In general the work may be regarded as excellent, except that many of the smaller theatres may regard it as too expensive for them to adopt as a whole. As a member of the committee, I raised this point in objection. However, while its truth was conceded, the majority held that the committee should put forward plans and specifications that might be regarded as ideal; that those feeling unable to follow them in their entirety might at least use them as a guide. Perhaps my colleagues are right. I cannot feel certain.

Upon one point I must, however, strongly disagree. Though it is my earnest wish to be able to concur in the majority opinion, this I find myself unable to do when I regard that opinion in collision with the best results at the screen. I have for 25 years or more advocated a semi-dark projection room, with all light sources hidden completely from view, with all light coming from the rear of the room and with a dark color or even a black front wall.

In search of the correctness of my position from the optical viewpoint, I have sought advice from several eminent opticians, every one of whom agreed that such a condition would afford a much better of view of the screen, except when the face of the observer be almost in contact with the observation port cover glass. Yet the committee has adopted a lighting recommendation that will flood the whole room, including the front wall, with light, as well as place within full view bright spots of light at each light source which, we must all agree, will tend to contract the pupil of the eyes and thus reduce keenness of vision of the distant screen. I most emphatically disagree with that recommendation.

It means a nice, bright room to work in, but with lack of critically keen definition upon the screen.

In all but lighting I heartily concur in the committees' recommendations.

The report as a whole comprises 15 pages, with several informative diagrams. It may be obtained from the SMPE, Hotel Pennsylvania, New York City. However, here are a few items that I have selected more or less at random.

Minimum height floor to ceiling, 8 feet, which is a reduction of 2 feet from the previous recommendation.

Minimum depth front to back, 12 feet; minimum length, 16 feet, with length extended where equipment demands it.

Rewind room minimum floor space, 80 square feet, with wire glass window in wall facing main projection room.

A lavatory is required equipped with running water, medicine cabinet and all necessities; also a room for power equipment, floor space governed by equipment requirements; one exit door at each end of room, minimum size 2 feet, 6 inches wide by 6 feet, 8 inches high, of approved one-hour fire-test type. Ceilings and walls down to within 4 feet of floors, shall be plastered with acoustic material. And so on through a very considerable list of specifications. The general lay-out is shown in the diagram, taken from the Journal of the Society. This revision of plans is the third.

WITH THEATRE FOLK OF THE LEHIGH VALLEY

BEING ADVISED by S. A. Seifert, secretary of Local 203, IATSE & MPMO, that the local and the theatre managers of Easton, Pa., were about of call a meeting December 18, of all projectionists and managers of the Lehigh Valley "in honor of F. H. Richardson and his work in years past in raising projection standards to higher level," and that I would be expected to address the gathering, I of course made it my business to be there. I was surprised and indeed gratified to find fully 50 managers and projectionists gathered about a breakfast table at the Hotel Easton.

Brother Seifert acted as chairman, and at the speaker's table were officials of all local unions located in the Lehigh Valley. I talked to the gathering along the lines of better co-operation between the manager's office and projection room. Easton, Allentown, Bangor, Penn Argyl, Bethlehem, and Nazareth, Pa., and Phillipsburg, Belvedere and Washington, N. J., were represented.

Discussion was invited by Mr. Seifert, which resulted in a proposal that, there being four local unions in the Lehigh Valley, a similar meeting be held every three months, to talk over mutual interests. The proposal was looked upon with favor by both managers and representatives of the various locals present.

Others among those present at this initial meeting were the following (there being some fifteen present whose names I failed to obtain):

J. F. Osterstock, J. H. Manry, Henry D. Behr, E. M. Black, James Dowling, K. S. Mack, H. A. Thomas, Harry Styers, J. W. McCraken, R. Frankfield, B. Corden, E. P. Rudlin, E. Roberts, G. W. Buss, H. W. MICRO-SWITCH ADDED TO IMPROVE OPERATION

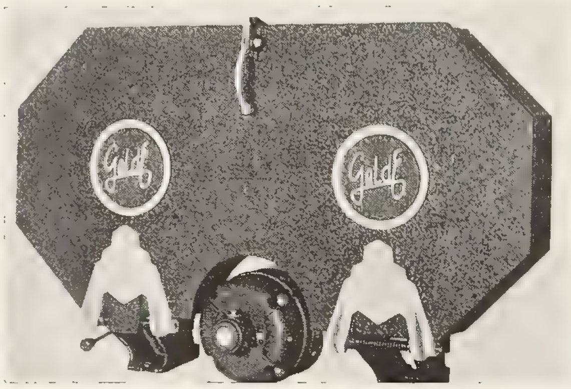
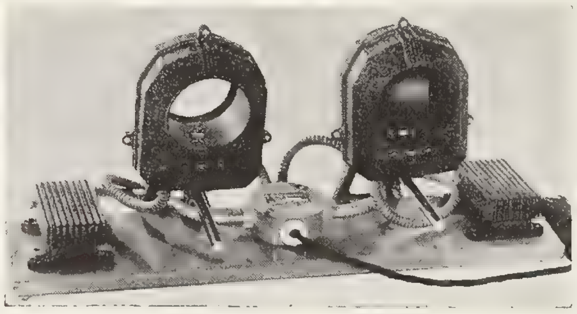
THE BENEFIT of superior operation made possible by foot-operated changeovers not infrequently carries with it the hazard of an accidental changeover ate the wrong time, resulting from unintentional kicking or jostling of the switch as it lies on the floor. Momentary heedlessness of the projectionist in moving some types of floor switch units in the course of threading or between-reel repairs can similarly interrupt a show. With the common mercury-type switch it is not necessary that the switch be thrown to create trouble.



Automatic rewinder.

Accidental glass breakage is another hazard to which mercury switches are subject, and which tends to offset their other advantages. Lastly, these switches, excellent as they are for many purposes, are not ideally adapted to work requiring extremely fast response, because their action depends on the flow of a heavy liquid.



Shutter-type changeover.

With these considerations in mind GoldE Manufacturing Company have equipped their latest automatic changeovers and automatic rewinders with a new form of swtiching unit known as the micro-switch. These units are so designed that changeover controls can be intentionally moved or even kicked, or taken off the floor and set elsewhere, without danger of accidental response. The action for operation must be positive, or the switch remains inert. Nevertheless, the micro-switch action is so sensitive, when intentionally operated, that it has been added to the GoldE automatic rewinder.

Special Decorations for Interiors of Wood Fibre

By PETER KLEIN

THE INCREASING use of wood fibre boards and wood veneers in the finishing of interiors has brought about effective methods for treating them decoratively, not merely to enhance their natural beauty, but to provide variety in design. I have worked with almost all types of insulating boards, but my experience more recently has been largely with the wood-fibre veneer called Nu-Wood, and in discussing here the decoration of wood insulating materials, I deal specifically with this type.

Nu-Wood is an acoustic and insulation board which can be readily applied to existing walls or ceilings, effectively modernizing them, and concealing damaged plaster surfaces and peeling paint. Most theatre owners are by this time aware of materials of this kind. I find, however, that people are not familiar with the decorative possibilities in the carving and painting of this material. But before going into methods of treatment, I want to point out a distinction between forms of wood insulating materials which my experience has taught me is important for the theatre.

I probably am risking some pretty strong objections, but it is nevertheless my opinion that tile forms, either oblong or square, and plank styles are not suited to decoration for a theatre. The theatre needs a decorative treatment of its own, not one that is a copy of something done in a store or barber shop next door. I have found the large boards best suited to decoration for a theatre. Additionally, the large boards are cheaper than the other forms, they can be installed in less time, and when furring is to be done, they require fewer strips.

Method of Decoration

In general, the method used for decorating Nu-Wood boards consists in applying grooving and other special tools for the creation of original line and curve patterns, mural figures, floral designs, etc., then treating these with colors. By taking advantage of the architectural form of the interior, an appearance of so many wall boards laid monotonously side by side is avoided. The color enhances the natural beauty of the material itself and extends the variety possible in the whole interior treatment. The boards reach the theatre completely decorated, ready for installation.

In applying the boards, I have found, in addition to the usual cement or adhesive recommended by the manufacturers, a special nail to be effective—it is a needle-pointed, cadmium-plated nail available in two lengths, 1¼ and 1½ inches, which holds well even in metal lath and plaster construction, and when driven in properly, the head is almost invisible. Where patrons would have close vision of the wall surface, this method is recommended: Raise the nap of the material slightly, then press down again in place over the nail head. When this is done, it is almost impossible to tell where the nails are located.

Acoustic Factors in Painting

Since Nu-Wood, like other finishing materials of its class, has sound-absorbing characteristics, which are frequently a considered factor in the treatment of the auditorium, it must be painted so as not to close its pores if it is to have any acoustic function. A casein paint is my own recommendation, diluted so as to be entirely non-bridging, but not so thin that the color loses its richness. Oil paints are permissible, of course, where there are no acoustic considerations.

For wainscoting, it is usually desirable to employ a material somewhat harder than the regular fibre veneers adapted to the upper walls and ceiling. When it is desired to have the wainscoting blend with the upper walls, one may use a special wainscot type of Nu-Wood board which has a ripple effect in its texture, is of suitable hardness, and is washable.

Meeting Low-Cost Lounge Needs

MODERNIZATION of the motion picture exhibition plant has not only been notably characterized by the substitution of overly ornamental forms with sleek modern lines, usually carried out in the newer architectural materials; revision of the theatre has also prominently included facilities to meet new and higher standards of comfort.

And in the advance of these improvements in theatre plan and style and equipment, the smaller theatre—in outlying sections of cities and in small towns alike—has played an important part. In fact, it is the smaller theatre which has undergone the most striking change. To one in a position to observe a representative number of plans for new theatres and remodeling projects, the provision of lounges in sizes and types of theatres that seldom boasted of more than the merest toilet facilities has been a common feature of the current modernization movement.

That no motion picture theatre catering to a good class of patronage can well be without some lounge provisions, be they in special rooms or as part of a foyer, is to be conceded today. Yet among the smaller theatres, this means not only more space devoted to traffic areas, but often the expenditure of money for items of furnishings that once could be dispensed with.

That, however, is a condition met with today throughout the theatre. Once the smaller, modestly appointed theatre could get along with veneer auditorium seating. Even composition flooring could be used where carpet is demanded today. Lighting, even at the front, commonly represented but a minor expenditure. Lounge facilities in some degree belong to a fairly large group of new necessities.

For the theatre of restricted budget metal furniture in general has made attractive lounge facilities readily accessible. Illustrated in these columns is furniture which goes yet a step further in the direction of economy. All of the pieces shown belong to a new Royalchrome group designed for low-cost installations. The seat cushions of both chair and settee are of spring construction, and these as well as the bench are covered in the same heavy-duty leatherette used in other Royalchrome metal furniture, which is available in 28 colors. The top of the end table is lacquered for hard usage. All of the metal is chromium-finished.

Theatre PLAN & FORM

IT WAS ALMOST impossible ten years ago to insist on a fundamental approach to motion picture theatre planning. Two basic factors, one being that the motion picture theatre could be designed specifically for screen entertainment only, and the other being that of controlling the capacity of a single theatre within a desirable minimum, were at that time difficult to establish.

Motion picture theatres constructed exclusively for the purpose of presenting screen entertainment are now built without the least hesitancy. Ten years ago they were considered by some to be an unsound investment.

Motion picture theatres recently constructed having seating capacities of approximately 1,000 are now considered comparatively large. Ten years ago they would have been considered fairly small.

Those of us who gave considerable thought to motion picture theatre design, knew for some time that the fundamental design approach was lacking. The motion picture itself had to mature to its present state; the physical limitations of the projection of the 35-mm. film, and viewing the picture projected thereof, had to be realized before scientific planning could be justified.

Often, scientific planning is wrongly interpreted as planning which takes into consideration only the desire to create ideal conditions. Intelligent application of scientific planning demands primarily efficient results which at the same time offer conditions as close to the ideal as practicable.

The new importance of the fundamental design approach for the motion picture theatre is evidenced by the action which the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is now taking to elevate its committee on theatre structures from a sub-committee status to that of a full-fledged committee.

Besides the actual structural, air-conditioning and ordinary shelter problems of the motion picture theatre, the seeing and hearing aspects are the outstanding considerations in determining form. Unfortunately, the seeing and hearing problems were dealt with individually in the past, resulting in less ideal and less efficient conditions. Latest developments show that there can be highly beneficial results in considering the seeing and hearing problems jointly. For example, it is gratifying to know that the most recent developments in floor slope design for decreasing obstruction of the view of the screen, results in a reduced cubage volume, which in turn is an aid to improving hearing conditions, besides effecting savings.

To meet the new consciousness in practical theatre operation, of advancing technical standards in theatre planning, these columns have been estabilshed as regular features. Both Mr. Schlanger and Mr. Potwin are consultants on inquiries from readers seeking counsel on the planning of theatres.

Placing All Seats On a Single Floor

MANY of the questions recently received inquire as to the relative merits of placing all seats on a single floor, or providing an upper level of seating to accommodate a portion of the seats. In the case of one inquiry, the use of an upper level of seating was the only feasible method whereby additional seats could be installed. In another case, the installation of an upper seating level was questioned as a means of improving the general form of the theatre auditorium.

While physical limitations may be a reason for utilizing an upper level of seating in some instances, they should not be the guiding factor in determining whether or not such an arrangement should be resorted to in all cases. The shape of the plot, the seating capacity required, the problem of screen size versus projection conditions and acoustical considerations, are a few of the many important factors which must be considered before the correct decision can be reached.

The following is a typical question from a reader relative to this particular phase of design:

"I am enclosing herewith a rough plan of my 307-seat house. I would like to enlarge my house to about 450 seats, and would appreciate suggestions. I know the house is narrow. It is possible to build back to the alley, but presume with only a 25-foot building the auditorium will look too long and narrow. I can put in a balcony by removing an apartment above the roof. In your estimation, how many seats can be placed in a 25-foot building with and without balcony? It might be less costly to build on another lot, although I own this building and hesitate to do that."

The answer was as follows:

In considering the width and length of your present structure, it would not be advisable to attempt to increase further the capacity on the basis of a single floor. The additional seats would make a single floor plan too long in shape for desirable vision and projection, would also create exceedingly unfavorable proportions from the accoustical standpoint, and make for an undesirable appearance. A mezzanine could accommodate 72 seats. Under these conditions the apartment above the auditorium would have to be removed to permit proper construction of the mezzanine.

ACOUSTICS in Form & Decoration

C. C. POTWIN

Consultant in Acoustics

DURING THE twelve-year period since sound first took its place as one of the primary functions of motion picture engineering many new developments have been realized both in sound recording and reproduction. Quality and naturalness practically equivalent to that of the original sound has been one of the outstanding achievements.

When we stop to consider the amount of time, energy, and expense involved in the research work which led to these developments, it seems almost incredible that so little attention has been given to the unit of the sound transmission system through which the fullest appreciation of these developments must be realized, namely, the motion picture theatre auditorium.

The quality, naturalness, and intelligibility of sound as it finally reaches the patron's ear is dependent to a very large extent upon the acoustical condition of the auditorium. If the auditorium is reverberant or subject to echo the overlapping or distinct repetition of sounds will mar and in many cases actually destroy intelligibility of reproduced speech. If, on the other hand, excessive amounts of acoustical materials are placed in the auditorium in an effort to overcome such defects, the auditorium will lack the necessary "life" or support so vital to the naturalness and proper quality of sound presentation.

Progress in the science of acoustics has not lagged during the period of development of sound systems. On the contrary, new and more economical methods of acoustical design have materialized as a result of constant research and practical experience. Not only have these methods led to better hearing conditions but they have also been a contributing factor to modern architecture.

New materials for the absorption of sound have also been developed—materials which are in many respects more adaptable to theatre treatment than were those available a decade ago. On the whole we might say that progress in the science of acoustics has actually kept pace with the developments in the mechanics of sound production.

With the exception of a very few cases the latest methods of acoustical planning and treatment are not being reflected in present day theatre design. Through the medium of this column it is proposed to present material periodically which will be helpful to the reader in solving his acoustical problems most economically, as well as effectively.

Directionalism in Microphones

- Control of sound pickup in in microphones used in public address, sound re-enforcement, etc., has long been the goal of sound engineers. Beginning here is a discussion of microphones in general, and of the new "cardioid" type in particular.

GLAMOROUS Lelita Laverne, representing $5,000 worth of advance publicity, trips lightly from the wings, glides over to the mike and, in tones calculated to lay 'em in the aisles, begins her opening number. A hush settles over the house. Then—to the utter consternation of everyone within hearing—Lelita gives forth a yowl of such bloodcurdling quality and intensity that even the cash customer snoozing back in aisle five is jerked to attention. Exit Lelita!

Exit, too, the operator standing guard over the public address equipment. At least his peace of mind has vanished! One fader step too much, in an effort to reach that block of seats in the "dead spot," and the sound re-enforcing system began its familiar "sing." What theatre, at one time or another, has not met with this exasperating experience? And what can be done about it? Why do public address systems howl? What is the cure?

Public address systems howl because, under certain conditions, the amplified sound as projected by the loudspeakers re-enters the microphone. This sets up a sort of sound "merry-go-round" which continues as long as the electrical circuits remain in operation. The loudspeakers feed the microphone and the microphone feeds back into the amplifiers and speakers. Break this chain of events and the trouble disappears. But, since the speakers always "spill" a certain amount of sound over into the microphone area, what can be done to prevent "feed-back?" Engineers have long dreamed of a microphone that would pick up all sounds, throughout the complete hearing range, from some one general direction and be insensitive to all sounds from other directions. Such a microphone would solve our feed-back problem nicely because we could turn its "deaf" side in the direction of the loudspeakers and the "chain of events" would be broken. Unfortunately, it presented serious difficulties to the designing engineer. Recently, however, such a device has been announced by Electrical Research Products, Inc. It is known as the Western Electric cardioid directional microphone and it promises to open new fields of usefulness for public address equipment generally and, in particular, to expand the value of sound reenforcing systems in theatres.

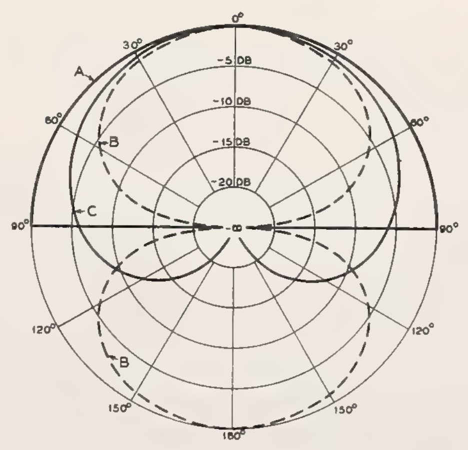

Figure 1. (A) Assumed ideal characteristic for general purpose directional microphone. (B) Bi-directional characteristic of the pressure gradient microphone. (C) Cardioid directional characteristic resulting from annulling one "loop" of a pressure gradient microphone output with that of a pressure type.

The new instrument, which consists of a unique combination of the familiar "diaphragm" and "ribbon" type microphones, has been under development in Bell Telephone Laboratories for a considerable period and some of the considerations entering into its design should form a valuable addition to the projectionist's store of technical data.

Most sound systems in use today are mon-aural. This means that all the transmitted sounds come from one source, the loudspeaker, and we cannot use the focussing power of our aural senses to separate unwanted sounds which are transmitted. Therefore, these unwanted sounds must be eliminated at the original location, and this may be done in two ways, either by making the microphone directive, or controlling the sources of unwanted sounds. A non-directional microphone necessitates the latter type of control which involves acoustically damped studios, quiet audiences or close proximity of the microphone to the desired source of sound. Although this type of control may be rather inconvenient and at times expensive, it has been employed in past years because of the relative difficulty of devising a good directional microphone.

On the other hand if we are going to attempt to make a directional microphone it behooves us to look into the type of directional characteristic that will be most helpful—to find the answer to "how directional?" First let us consider briefly the principal classes of sounds we wish to exclude. The most important, for the purpose under consideration, is feed-back. Next, and almost equally important are reflected sounds or echoes which render the sound reverberant. Now a certain amount of reverberant sound is necessary to achieve naturalness since we are accustomed to listening in rooms or auditoriums, but in mon-aural listening, where we lose the focusing power of our aural senses, reverberation becomes much more noticeable or unnatural. If the reflected sound can be reduced either at the reflecting surfaces by acoustic treatment or at the microphone, then the reverberant effect may be reduced to the point where the reproduced sound will be natural. Aside from the expense of the acoustical treatment, musicians and performers in general find that "dead" stages and auditoriums affect their performances because of the unnaturalness of the surroundings, with the result that in recent years the trend has been toward "livelier" stages. The modified live-end dead-end theatre is one means of solving the problem without requiring directionality of the microphone.

Another class of undesirable sound, by definition, is noise. A very common example is the audience noises, emanating particularly from the front seats, which are picked up by the re-enforcing system and amplified along with the entertainment. This interference is particularly noticeable when pickup from remote corners of the stage is attempted. In sound picture recording, of course, it may be camera click and an endless variety of unwanted sounds originating in the studio from many sources.

In many cases in sound pickup either there are a large number of performers as in an orchestra or else a large area of action as on the stage and if the microphone is made too sharply directional, a large number of instruments would be required to cover this area. In general, however, a line can be drawn on one side of which is the area of desired sound sources and on the other undesired. Thus the footlights divide the stage from the audience. It is the opinion of many people in the field that a pickup angle of at least 120° and not more than 180° is desirable for most work. We may assume then that the perfect directional microphone for most purposes is one that picks up perfectly all sounds originating in one hemisphere of a globe shaped space and shuts out completely all sounds from the other hemisphere. Such a microphone can be represented by a diagram as shown in Figure 1 (A). With this as a goal our problem resolves itself to finding practical means of approximating this performance.

The simplest of all directional microphones whose directivity is not affected by frequency, that is, it is equally directional for all pitches from the lowest bass to the highest treble, is the ribbon type. This type is "two-eared" or bidirectional for it picks up sound either from the front or back but not from the sides. Its pickup pattern is shown as the two-looped broken line in Figure 1 (M). The pickup control obtainable with this type is limited since, as we have seen, unwanted sounds very often come from opposite directions, and not from the sides. Nevertheless, because of the lack of a better directional instrument, this type has found wide use.

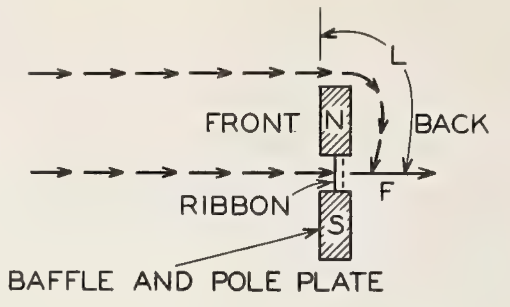

Figure 2. Showing the action of forces which cause motion in "ribbon" microphones. Sound wave pressures develop unequally in front and in back of the ribbon due to differences in the length of the sound paths. This pressure "difference" causes the ribbon to move in its magnetic field and to produce a voltage across the microphone terminals.

The two-looped figure, however, presents the beginnings of an idea. If we could only find some means of cancelling one of the loops then we would have something more like what we are looking for. Fortunately we do not have to search far since any of the "diaphragm" type microphones, such as the dynamic, condenser or crystal, possess a property which can be used to cancel one loop. To clearly understand how this is possible let us briefly consider here the fundamental principles that are involved.

First, let us assume that our microphones are small compared with the wave length of sound. Under these conditions sound will "flow" right around corners and the microphone cannot cast an acoustic "shadow." The operation of the ribbon microphone is illustrated in Figure 2. In any sound field there will exist a difference in pressure between two neighboring points which, in effect, moves along with the sound wave. As the sound wave approaches the pressure on the ribbon will be greatest on the side from which the sound is coming and least on the side that is turned away from the oncoming wave. Obviously the ribbon will be swept along in the direction in which the approaching wave is travelling. After the crest of the wave has passed and the pressure changes to the opposite side of the ribbon, it will be flexed back again.

Because of the manner in which the ribbon is clamped in its mounting it cannot be flexed edgewise but can move only in a direction facing its flat surfaces. If sound, therefore, approached the ribbon directly toward its edge the pressure is the same on both flat sides of the ribbon. These two pressures cancel each other and there is no force tending to move the ribbon. If the ribbon does not move in its magnetic field no voltage is generated.

The ribbon moves in the same direction as the approaching wave front. This means the ribbon will be swept in the opposite direction when the sound source changes from a position behind the instrument to a new location in front.

[In the February issue of Better Theatres, the "pressure" type microphone will be discussed, leading into a comprehensive description of the new "cardioid" type.—The Editor.]

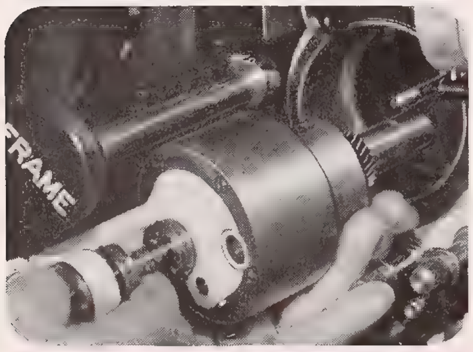
Intermittent Movement

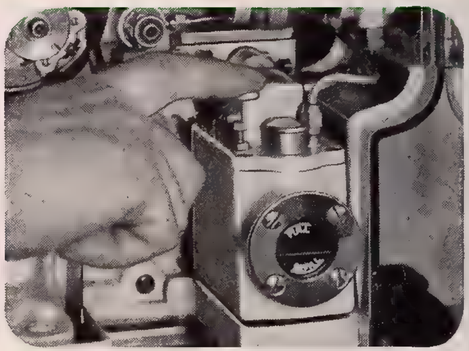
Readily removable. Unnecessary to take down or disturb any part of soundhead. Intermittent Oil Cushion permits closer tolerance between cam ring and star wheel, increases shock absorption, gives longer wear, reduces vibration and increases steadiness of picture.



PATRONS enjoy the picture more with E-7 Projectors and are telling others. That's one way for Owners to meet competition.

OWNERS find that increased business pays cost of E-7 Projectors, and maintenance charges are lower. A clearer and steadier picture and increased light, which is particularly good for Technicolor, makes a great hit with Everybody.

PROJECTIONISTS say—"We know we are getting a better picture with E-7 Projectors and naturally we like them. We also like their many mechanical advantages."



One-shot Oiling System

An occasional slight pressure on the oil pump lever automatically supplies—at all times—the correct amount of filtered oil. Eliminates faulty lubrication and damage by dirty, unfiltered oil.

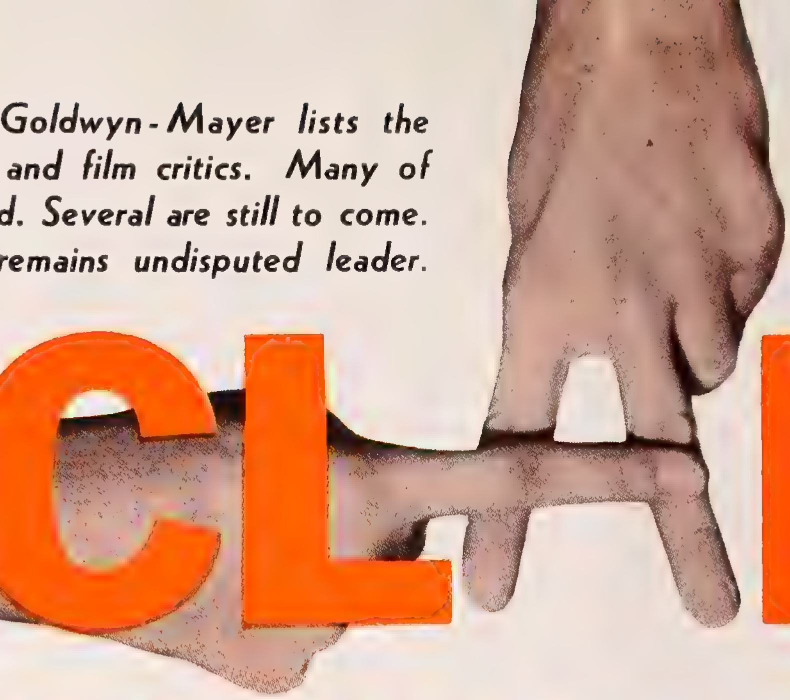
As in previous years Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lists the annual check-up by exhibitors and film critics. Many of the year-end polls are completed. Several are still to come. M-G-M, the "A" Company, remains undisputed leader.



ACCLAIM!

1–ALMOST 30% OF INDUSTRY'S HITS ARE M-G-M!

Box-office Champions selected by exhibitor vote in QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS' survey from 1930 to 1938 give M-G-M almost 30 per cent of this industry's hits, 46 out of 166, (nearest competing company has 27). In the QUIGLEY poll of the past year M-G-M again leads all companies in Box-office Champions. Of 12 monthly Blue Ribbon Awards by BOX-OFFICE MAGAZINE during the past year M-G-M leads all companies with 4. Since the inception of the Blue Ribbon Awards M-G-M has won 23, nearest competitor 14. M-G-M exceeds all companies in VARIETY'S survey of Top Picture Grossers. Likewise in SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW list of 25 Best Major Productions voted by exhibitors M-G-M leads with 7, nearest competitor 5. A conclusive analysis of Distributor's Batting Average for 1938 conducted by NATIONAL BOX-OFFICE DIGEST gives M-G-M a rating of 102 per cent, nearest competitor 92 per cent.

2–M-G-M STARS ARE BOX-OFFICE LEADERS!

Out of 12 All-American Favorites, M-G-M leads with 5 in BOX-OFFICE MAGAZINE'S Annual Poll. In the QUIGLEY Poll M-G-M leads with 5 out of the first 7 Money-Making Stars, topping all companies. In SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW Annual Poll, out of 21 leading Box-office stars M-G-M heads all companies with 7 top money-makers. M-G-M also leads VARIETY'S Annual Poll of greatest money-making stars (as well as Top Money Directors).

3–N. Y. CRITICS PICK M-G-M FOR YEAR'S BEST FILM!

THE CRITIC'S CIRCLE, composed of all New York's famed motion picture critics, have selected "The Citadel" as the Best Picture of 1938. This group also selected Margaret Sullavan for the year's best performance by an actress.

4–M-G-M AGAIN TOPS FILM DAILY'S "TEN BEST" LIST!

The annual FILM DAILY poll of hundreds of film critics throughout America gives M-G-M another victory this year with 4 out of "The Ten Best Pictures." ("Citadel," "Boys Town," "Marie Antoinette," "Love Finds Andy Hardy"). As we go to press M-G-M has more winners on individual nationwide published lists of Film Critics' "Ten Best Pictures of the Year" than any other company.

5–WATCH "PYGMALION"!

Imagine! Out of 9 New York newspapers, 8 critics placed M-G-M's "Pygmalion" on their lists of "The Year's Ten Best."

And the future for M-G-M Showmen is very bright!

THE BLIND BUY

FROM Hollywood-the-producer come continued complaints that the "Greatest Year" campaign attained conspicuously not-so-much at the box office.

Possibly in time it will become apparent to the "creative community" that in the motion picture business there really is no ultimately satisfactory substitute for motion pictures.

Everything else has been tried.

Every now and then somebody makes a picture and it does business. That simple method could be used more often.

Hollywood fell somewhat short of making it the "Greatest Year", in the large. That was not, certainly, by design, but rather for the lack of design.

An examination of the crystallized summarization of what the motion picture industry, including Hollywood, was thinking, talking and doing the most about in 1938, as presented in the "headlines of the year" in the December 31 issue of Motion Picture Herald, will find pictures made very few headlines as compared with issues about the distribution, selling and exhibition of pictures.

There was a venerable and honored tradition of what was once the show business epitomized in "the show must go on".

When the show does not go on, the box office and the public become most aware. The "Greatest Year" campaign was "blind buying".

ANNUAL selection of lists of "the best" has become a national epidemic. For the sake of the record it is to be set down that the Daily Worker of New York, which has critics and departments devoted to the arts, has presented its choices in two categories:

1—"The most significant picture of the year was the Soviet production, 'Professor Mamlock' . . . A close second was 'Blockade', the Wanger-Lawson-Dieterle film on Spain . . . "—this by Mr. David Platt.

2—"This week we are satisfying a primitive urge by listing the worst. At the very top, almost unchallenged, stands 'Marie Antoinette' . . . two million dollars worth of scalloped icing . . . "—by-lined by Mr. Peter Kinney.

Mr. Kinney seems to have been displeased because the icing was applied to Marie Antoinette instead of the sans culottes. That, one may assume, is an expression of taste—an opinion in art.

America and its motion picture industry must be eternally indebted to the constructive and unbiased judgments of the impartial press.

SPEAKING of names, California's flower seed industry has been having a time for the last three years building up a stock of an elaborately nurtured and allegedly new red ipomoea—morning glory to you—and at last with it ready for release, have named it Scarlett O'Hara. Now comes the discovery that the damthing grows wild down South, a weed in fact.

"FIRST STAR" FADES

WHEN Florence Lawrence closed her career by her own design last week, she became a national story because of Hollywood, tragedy and her three divorces. In another sense her passing was the more tragic, too, because of the yet unnoted fact that it was Florence Lawrence whose fame and public following established the star system for the motion picture.

Miss Lawrence and Mr. Harry Salter left the stage for the motion picture in the early years of Vitagraph out in Flatbush and moved to the American Biograph Company in the golden age of that concern as Mr. D. W. Griffith started his rise in 1909. Miss Lawrence, kept anonymous by the policy of the company, became world famed as The Biograph Girl. Therein Mr. Carl Laemmle and his diligent confrere, Mr. Robert Cochrane, found opportunity.

One day Miss Lawrence vanished and from way out in St. Louis came a story intimating she had been mysteriously slain. Presently she was found alive, on page one and on a contract with the Independent Motion Picture Company which was to be the famous "Imp" which became Universal Pictures Corporation. The project proved so successful that it established a policy. The next raid on Biograph took Miss Mary Pickford for "Imp". The star era had dawned.

YOU remember what somebody said about a certain piccolo player. Well, it seems that when the Paramount theatre in Broadway opened of a Wednesday with that costly "Zaza" the bill also included Mr. Benny Goodman and his orchestra. According to the public prints, the jitterbugs dominant in the audience hooted and shouted through the picture for Benny, to the utter destruction of the picture showing. The Paramount has known about the jitterbugs and Benny for quite awhile. The reaction had nothing much to do with the picture, and certainly did nothing for it. Apparently production and exhibition do not, in some spots, precisely coordinate.

A SUMMARY of electrical developments for the year just ended, by Mr. Guy Bartlett of the General Electric Company, brings to attention the interestingly new device of operating electrical generators in an atmosphere of hydrogen, reducing air-friction by nine-tenths—which will mean cheaper current. Also the year has seen the coming of important improvements in light sources, including the new fluorescent lamps, capable of giving any tint in the visible spectrum, and presently to be applied to showmanship at the New York World's Fair. So far "The Great White Way" is mostly red and green. Presently it will be a rainbow.

JOURNALISM NOTE—Maybe it's all right, but we got quite a start the other morning on observing that the building that is our new neighbor in Rockefeller Center is shared so very adjacently by the Associated Press and the National Cash Register.

This Week

Bright Promise

Production executives are busy with pencils and memo pads and transportation lines between home offices and Hollywood are loaded with officers hurrying to and from studio conferences, signs of exceptionally early concern with busy plans for the 1939-40 season. In many cases such projections have passed beyond the nebulous stage and titles and stars are set down in black and white ready for discussion at sales meetings for which dates have been set. An early look at the specifications discloses significantly that action pictures will be emphasized and that not a single glamour girl musical or lunatic comedy is scheduled so far.

Film Pages

An attack on poorly conducted, careless and slipshod motion picture departments on daily newspapers by Arthur Schmidt, advertising representative of the Loew's, Inc., advertising and publicity department is published in the current Editor and Publisher. The article advances arguments for editors to accord at least as much journalistic attention to the motion picture page as is given sports and other departments, cites the reader interest value of the film pages as recorded by various polls and surveys, and shows how both theatres and newspapers could benefit by more careful conduct of the department.

Theatre managers of all classes should benefit by employing the ideas advanced in the article on page 29.

Radio Millions

Year end reports of the broadcasting networks show that national advertisers during 1938 spent $68,808,076 for time on National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting System stations. The cost of talent and material for the radio shows is believed to have brought the total to over $100,000,000. Procter and Gamble, soap manufacturer, was the ranking space buyer, having spent $6,170,862 with Standard Brands and General Foods in close order.

The statistics are on page 30.

"Not for Sale"

The Twentieth Century-Fox holdings in Gaumont British are not for sale, Joseph Schenck, chairman of the board of directors, said in Hollywood Sunday. Weekend reports from London indicated that British financial interests had heard that Twentieth Century-Fox was willing to sell its 4,900 shares in Metropolis and Bradford Trust, GB holding company, at a suitable price.

Advertisers Object

Radio advertising agencies do not oppose the unionization of radio artists, but they cannot cope with "ruinous" and "unreasonable" wage demands, according to C. J. La Roche, chairman of the Advertising Agency Conference Committee, which has been meeting with representatives of the American Federation of Radio Artists. The wage demands of the union would discourage daytime programs, and might even prevent the use of radio by advertisers, Mr. La Roche asserted. (Also see page 28).

Television Again

The investigation by the Federal Communications Commission into charges of monopoly in broadcasting continues to be, in effect, a sounding board for statistics about television emitted before the commission. Major Lenox R. Lohr, president of the National Broadcasting Company, last week declared that networking of television is not possible at present, without exorbitant expense.

In new year statements by leaders in the television industry, warnings were given against "too much publicity," lest the public be misled into expecting too much.

The article is on page 38.

Reopened

Paris cinemas reopened Saturday after a three day strike when Vice-Premier Camille Chautemps intervened. He asked the industry delegates to consider the problem nationally and its effect on Paris life. Mr. Chautemps said the exhibitors agreed to reopen pending the result of an investigation into the tax situation which caused the strike.

"Quiz" Judging

With an estimated "two million and more" returns received thus far at the Movie Quiz contest headquarters in New York, the judges met Wednesday at luncheon in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, and decided to judge all entries by key numbers, rather than by signatures. The judges, Mrs. Ogden Reid, Dr. James E. West, Homer Fickett (representing Congressman Bruce Barton) and Hendrik Willem Van Loon, visited contest headquarters and there saw an estimated 500 mail bags still unopened. Harold B. Franklin of the committee said another two weeks will be required to handle the entries.

Trade Practices

Representatives of organized distributors and of exhibitors resumed conferences this week on the companies' 16-point "tentative draft" of trade practice overhauling. While objections have been raised on four grounds by various exhibitor groups, the distributors' proposals are expected in some quarters to be the basis of the program eventually to be adopted.

Allied States Association's position will be determined Tuesday in Washington at a "Founders' Day" dinner commemorating the tenth anniversary of the organization as at present constituted.

Ticket Code

The possession of "choice seat" tickets by certain ticket brokers who are not signatories to the code governing distribution of New York legitimate theatre tickets, impelled the board of governors of the League of New York Theatres to announce its decision last week to call a meeting to reexamine the code.

Decision was expected this week by Supreme Court Judge Louis A. Valente, on the suit for a restraining order brought by the Acme Theatre Ticket Office, 170 West 44th Street, against the Actor's Equity Association, and the league, charging that enforcement of the code was "illegal restraint" of trade.

Headlines

Jack Benny of Jello radio shows and Paramount films, is the second "big name" to become enmeshed, innocently or not, in the Albert Chapereau jewelry smuggling case in New York, a special Federal Grand Jury on Tuesday indicting both. Benny, denying all guilt, was released in $1,000 bail. January 24th was set as trial date. George Burns, of the Burns and Allen radio-films comedy team is awaiting sentence in the Chapereau case, having pleaded guilty two weeks ago.

The William Buckner Philippine railroad bond case in Los Angeles this week brought subpoenas to a dozen Hollywood personalities to appear as witnesses, among them Frank Morgan, Miriam Hopkins, Ronald Colman, Herbert Marshall, Bing Crosby, Binnie Barnes, Phyllis Brooks, Gene Mobileski, Nick Carter, Cary Grant and Leon Errol, all presumably purchasers of the bonds which the Federal Government charges were "kited" far above their actual value.

Ruth Etting's domestic issues with "Colonel" (The Gimp) Martin Snyder were settled Friday in Hollywood when Snyder was sentenced to "not more than 20 years" in prison for the shooting of Myrl Alderman, successor of Snyder as husband of radio-films "blues-singer" Etting.

In Supreme Court

The United States supreme court this week heard arguments in the two socalled Texas anti-trust suit appeals, began hearing testimony and briefs in two suits involving the validity of state laws aimed at the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and had before it the petition of Paramount Pictures for review of a district court decision upholding the North Dakota theatre "divorcement" law, on which the court is to decide whether it will consider the case after consideration of briefs now being prepared for submission. Last week the court ruled that the West Virginia gross receipts tax was not applicable to motion picture distributors.

Bicycling

For the first time since 1927 violations of exhibition contracts numbered more in the "bicycling" category than in the unauthorized holdover class, according to the annual report of the Copyright Protection Bureau, which attributed the increase to three circumstances, a number of new exhibitors, acquisition of new houses by owners who formerly operated only one, and an increase of several thousand in the total number of theatres in operation.

The Bureau's report is on page 68.

Repetition

Study of the several bills directed at legislative control of the motion picture industry which were introduced in the first few days of the new Congressional session shows them to be almost verbatim repetitions of measures introduced at previous sessions but never enacted. They include the several anti-block booking and blind selling bills, the proposal for a Federal Film Commission to regulate the industry and a bill for amending and consolidating the copyright acts. None of the new bills take cognizance of any possible change in conditions or of the demands made by the Department of Justice in its suit in equity. Among the states a divorcement bill was introduced in Nebraska.

Legislative developments are on page 15.

Reade's Race Track

Walter Reade, head of the New Jersey theatre circuit which bears his name, announced on his return to New York this week from Hollywood, his intention to build a $1,500,000 race track in Hudson County, New Jersey. Mr. Reade said he had devoted his California sojourn to study of race track operations.

Effective June 1, racing will be legal in New Jersey. The law permits three race tracks in the state. Mr. Reade asserted his proposed track would be "equal to" Santa Anita and other similar tracks on the coast, and should be in operation by August.

Soviet Film Play

A new system of pay for motion picture scenarists, cameramen, directors and composers was published this week, according to an Associated Press dispatch from Moscow. A director can be paid in rubles the equivalent of $1,200 to $10,000 for each picture according to its length, quality and importance, the cameraman $400 to $3,000. Higher payments can be made only in cases of outstanding achievement and by special approval of the Council of People's Commissars. In addition to these payments, directors receive salaries of between $240 and $400 monthly, camerman $200 to $300. Scenarists and composers receive, according to the character and importance of their work, up to $8,000 per scenario or $3,000 per composition.

British Doldrums

Exhibitors of Great Britain point to a new low for receipts in the holiday season, normally a rent paying period, in their appeals for settlement of the overseating problem, the growing dominance of circuits, double featuring and, perhaps especially, film shortage. At the same time, outside economists say that over a period of years there has been a steady increase of attendance and add that a vast market of potential patronage awaits tapping. To this the exhibitors repeat: last year there were 152 fewer features available than normally.

Five labor unions representing film industry groups have petitioned the Board of Trade for an increase in the renters' (distributors') quota for next year to 20 per cent and to 40 per cent for the following year. The renters' quota at present is 15 per cent and under a sliding scale will increase to 30 per cent in 10 years.

Aubrey Flanagan's weekly letter on the industry in Great Britain is on page 52.

From Australia

Returned from a three months' tour of Australia during which he studied the Hoyt theatre circuit properties, Dan Michalove, assistant to Sidney R. Kent, summed up his impressions of the market there with the statement that the Australian public's screen preferences are similar to those of Americans, except that they dislike "gangster," "smart aleck" and "coed" pictures. He said, too, that the recent establishment of a License Commission in New South Wales would likely prove a boomerang to exhibitors.

The interview with Mr. Michalove and a statement from the Hoyt circuit directors on the quota situation appear on page 42 and a picture of the 20th Century-Fox executive is in the pictorial section on page 10.

By Harris & Ewing

MEMBERS of Congress had been in Washington scarcely long enough to light their cigars when the solons shown above proposed bills having particular regard to the film industry. Representative Francis D. Culkin, left, wanted prohibition of blind selling and a Federal Film Commission. Representative Andrew Edmiston, center, introduced an anti-block booking bill as successor to the Pettengill bill of previous sessions. Senator Matthew M. Neely, right, again is sponsoring his block booking bill.

IRVING ASHER, below, production head of London Films, arrives in New York on the Washington on his way to join Alexander Korda in Hollywood for one of the many separate and joint conferences being held there among United Artists partners, producers attorneys and financiers. Story on page 14.

This Week In Pictures

By Staff Photographer

WALTER McNALLY, RKO manager for Ireland and owner of an extensive circuit in the Free State, interviewed during a visit to the home office in New York, painted an enthusiastic picture of the market in Erin. Business during 1938, he said, was 33 per cent better than in 1937, and a comparable increase in 1939 can be expected. The interview is on page 18.

What do you mean—democracy?

IN November public announcement was made of an agency, entitled "Films for Democracy". The accompanying statement of policy was vague, indefinite and garnished with catch-line phrases frequently met with in utterances of radical propagandists.

Various persons whose names are associated with the enterprise have been identified with left-wing activities.

Irrespective of the character of its political objectives, "Films for Democracy" appeared plainly as an effort to invade the theatre screen with political haranque, however adroitly disguised, and to capture for partisan, political purposes the vast audiences which customarily attend motion picture theatres in search of relaxation and diversion.

On account of these and other considerations involving the industry's responsibility to protect its audiences against being used, without their knowledge or consent, as guinea pigs for the experiments of political theorists, Motion Picture Herald registered its disapproval of and opposition to "Films for Democracy".

Specifically this opposition was based on:

(1) The Herald's established policy generally in opposition to any and all attempts to use the entertainment screen for prejudiced, partisan propaganda, whether political, commercial or of any other character.

(2) Indications that the carefully disguised purposes contemplated the surreptitious use of the entertainment screen for the promotion of foreign ideologies destructive of and not in support of American democracy.

For purposes of clarification as to the latter consideration and in order to void any suspicions that may in point of fact be ungrounded, the Herald has published in the past three consecutive issues the following request for information:

"INFORMATION, PLEASE!

IN sequel to editorial expressions presented in Motion Picture Herald have come certain criticisms of what has been deemed the attitude of this publication toward "Films for Democracy", which some contend is a constructive, patriotic movement for the preservation of the traditional democracy of the United States of America.

Motion Picture Herald therefore considers it appropriate to ask "Films for Democracy" clearly, officially and publicly to declare its position with respect to:

1—The political theories commonly known as Communism.

2—The political theories commonly known as Fascism.

3—The political theories characteristic of both Communism and Fascism, and commonly described as Totalitarianism, under which the state reserves to itself complete rights over the life, liberty and pursuits of the individual, denying to the individual those rights held under the traditional American system as a natural and inalienable heritage.

MARTIN QUIGLEY."

Although the Herald's criticism and accompanying inferences relative to "Films for Democracy" have been assailed in unrecorded remarks by interested persons, no reply has been received to this request for a definite, clear-cut statement of position.

This failure to reply, together with various collaterals, is reasonably susceptible to the following interpretation:

"Films for Democracy" is unable to repudiate all foreign political philosophies, including Communism, which are a threat to American institutions because its real purposes are sympathetic in whole or in part to Communism and because it is from that sector it expects its support.

If this interpretation is objected to and if an authoritative statement categorically disavowing all objectives commonly regarded as subversive is presented, the Herald will be pleased to publish it.

In the continued absence of any such categorical denial the industry and interested persons generally will remain in little doubt as to where "Films for Democracy" stands.

MARTIN QUIGLEY.

A Letter

Motion Picture Herald:

In reply to your letter enclosing a clipping referring to "Films for Democracy," I have no authority to speak for the organization, but take the opportunity to make the following statements for myself:

1—I am absolutely opposed to "The political theories commonly known as Communism", to quote your phrase; or, to use my own, I am absolutely opposed to Communism, the Communist Party, Communists, Reds, Pinks, and that ilk, my strong views on the subject being well known to my friends.

2—I am absolutely opposed to "The political theories commonly known as Fascism".

3—I am absolutely opposed to "Totalitarianism", or "Authoritarianism", and to all political "isms" except Americanism.

When "Films for Democracy" wrote, requesting permission to use my name as one of its sponsors, and explaining its anti-Nazi character, I replied that they might do so if it was clearly understood that I was both anti-Nazi (or anti-Fascist) and anti-Communist, and would have no connection with any organization whose political views differed with mine.

At the dinner which took place shortly thereafter, and which I attended, I noticed that my name had been used as one of a group of "founders", this, I take it, because of my anti-Fascist and anti-Communist play, "Blood of the Martyrs," based on a story by Stephen Vincent Benet. This play, first produced by the Federal Radio Theatre, was first published separately a little less than a year ago.

At the dinner referred to there was speech-making of an anti-Nazi and anti-Fascist character. Communism was not mentioned, nor were any doctrines of a Communist character expressed. The thought developed at length was that since the commercial motion picture enterprises hesitated to attack Naziism and Fascism, fearing loss of European business, there was a place for an organization dedicated entirely to attacking those philosophies.

I trust that the above answers your questions.

You are at liberty to print this letter.

Faithfully,

PERCIVAL WILDE.

HOLLYWOOD '39-40 PLANS; FEWER B'S, MORE ACTION

Action Pictures Will Be Emphasized; Not One Glamour-Girl Musical or "Screwball" Comedy Indicated Thus Far

Planning of product for 1939-40 is definitely underway, marking the earliest start in a decade on the construction of a new season's program.

An impressive array of high-powered executives and others who will determine what the exhibitor will get, product-wise, next season have been assembling for a week in Hollywood for that purpose; budgets are being announced even at this early date, and annual sales conventions to signal the start of selling in the field are being arranged.

Within the last few days Hollywood has witnessed the arrival and departure of a score of its home office officials, traveling westward to talk about remaining commitments for this season and what might be produced for next. Nicholas M. Schenck, president, and William F. Rodgers, general sales manager of Loew's, were at Culver City; Nate J. Blumberg, president, and W. A. Scully, general sales manager of Universal, were at Universal City; Maurice Silverstone, Alexander Korda and all of the other United Artists chiefs are now in Hollywood, likewise W. Ray Johnston, of Monogram, and a dozen others. George Schaefer, president, and Ned Depinet, vice-president of RKO, will arrive in Hollywood Tuesday.

"Balanced Diet" of Films

Besides product identity, it is definitely known that in several cases decisions on policies have been reached. Outdoor adventure pictures, big and little, will feature the release schedules of many a large company, immediately and on into 1939-40. Predominant, too, is the opinion that "Class B" pictures will be fewer.

A "balanced diet" of entertainment is hoped for in the new year. Not one glamour-girl musical is on the schedule books at the moment, not one of the "screwball" comedies so vigorously abloom the last two years.

Socalled "legitimate" comedies appear instead on the program. Operettas and musical backgrounds, instead of the gamour-girls, are there too, along with topical dramas, historicals, and, as Hollywood Boulevard hears, a sprinkling of stories dealing with contemporary political and social problems.

"Alexander Graham Bell" and "Juarez" are samples of what might be expected in the way of biographies. Pieces projected on the lives and musical accomplishments of Chopin and George Gershwin indicate the trend in musical production. "Hotel Imperial" and "Idiot's Delight" will portray what might happen if the forces of war actually were let loose in Europe. At least a dozen productions are planned either to glorify or satirize the present day American and social situation, among them Charles R. Rogers' "That Crucial Night," based on the Hitler-Chamberlain conferences in Munich.

History will be resorted to for "Gone with the Wind," "Northwest Passage," "Wagons Westward," "Rulers of the Sea," "Union Pacific," "Gettysburg," "Royal Canadian Mounted Police," "Knights of the Round Table," and others.

17,737,879 FEET OF GOVERNMENT FILM

A three-year survey released this week showed that Government records were housed in 6,492 rooms and consisted of 2,699,561 cubic feet of paper. Dr. R. D. W. Connor, national archivist, told Congress there were also 17,737,879 feet of motion picture film, 2,346,598 photograph negatives and 5,495 sound recordings.

He said more than one-third of the records were exposed to fire hazards and nearly half of them to dust and filth.

Twenty-three pictures featuring the 10 Biggest Money Making Stars named by exhibitors in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD poll will go into production within the next eight months, according to the studios employing them, to wind up this season, but principally for the next. The actual number of their appearances on the screen will be greater than this, both because present plans are incomplete and because their indicated drawing power will place their services on a premium basis.

Shirley Temple, whose "The Little Princess" is now in the cutting room, has "The Little Diplomat" and "Susanna of the Mounties" on her immediate schedule. Clark Gable, whose "Idiot's Delight" is being edited, goes into "Gone with the Wind" and thence back to straight MGM employment in "A Lady Comes to Burk-Bennett," a Texas oil fields story, and "Wings Over the Desert," a story of Arab revolt.

Sonja Henie's next picture has not been decided upon but the studio has 10 of them under contemplation to choose from.

Mickey Rooney is at work as "Huckleberry Finn," with "Babes in Arms" to follow. These are in addition to his Hardy Family appearances, the next of which is to be titled "The Hardys Ride High."

Spencer Tracy goes to Twentieth Century-Fox on loan for "Stanley and Livingstone" and returns to MGM, where he now is making "I Take This Woman," to co-star with Robert Taylor and Wallace Beery in "Northwest Passage," when that interrupted enterprise goes back into production along about April. Taylor is to star in "Lady of the Tropics" opposite Hedy Lamarr and in "Hands Across the Border," a story about hockey and West Point.

Myrna Loy is scheduled for "The Return of the Thin Man," opposite William Powell, and Jane Withers is down for three productions, none selected as yet.

Alice Faye, shortly to be seen in "Tail Spin," and Tyrone Power, coming up in "Jesse James," are at work in "Rose of Washington Square," now in production.

First Convention Is Set by Twentieth Century-Fox

While Darryl Zanuck and the Twentieth Century-Fox production executives in Hollywood were starting to plan 1939-40 production —they signed "Annabella" for two this week— the distribution branch in New York decided on April 15th to 17th and Chicago as the dates and place for the 1939-40 sales convention, first to be definitely set this year. Sidney R. Kent, president, will open the meeting, and after that he will travel to Paris to preside at the European convention, May 4, 5 and 6, thence to London, on May 11, 12, 13, and to Rio de Janeiro for the company's first South American convention, in June, returning to New York June 27th.

Herman Wobber, U. S. distribution head, and W. J. Hutchinson, foreign sales director, will accompany Mr. Kent to Paris and London, Mr. Hutchinson continuing on down to Rio.

The company, already having sold a reputed 11,500 accounts for 1938-39, is reported contemplating a considerably increased budget for 1939-40.

As with several other majors, the present season's business is being stimulated by a drive for bookings, known as the "Sidney Kent Drive."

Meanwhile Mr. Hutchinson leaves New York this weekend for Hollywood product talks with Mr. Zanuck, joining Robert T. Kane, British production director, who is now in California.

25 Millions Set for 1939 By Paramount Pictures

Fifty-eight features to cost $28,000,000. That's the 1939-40 program of Paramount Pictures, as outlined over the weekend by Neil F. Agnew, vice-president in charge of distribution, at a mid-year sales conference, at the Coronado hotel in St. Louis. This is the first definite announcement by any major of full product plans for the new season.

Indicating the trend at that studio, Mr. Agnew said that "America's taste in screen entertainment has concentrated itself on fast action and romantic dramas against colorful backgrounds and with human down-to-earth emotions and comedy. Our company has tailored its 1939 program to fit these demands." Thereupon he outlined 31 features to be released this year, some on 1938-39 contracts, many for 1939-40. They follow:

"Zaza" heads the list of new releases, followed by "Paris Honeymoon," starring Bing Crosby; "St. Louis Blues," with Dorothy Lamour; "Cafe Society," Madeleine Carroll, Fred MacMurray and Shirley Ross; "The Beachcomber," Charles Laughton and Elsa Lanchester; "Hotel Imperial," Isa Miranda and Ray Milland; "Never Say Die," Bob Hope and Martha Raye; "I'm from Missouri," Bob Burns; "The Lady from Kentucky," George Raft and Ellen Drew; Cecil B. DeMille's "Union Pacific," with Barbara Stanwyck and Joel McCrea; "Midnight," Claudette Colbert and Don Ameche, and "Man About Town," with Jack Benny and Dorothy Lamour.

Additional titles listed were "Beau Geste," with Gary Cooper; "The Gracie Allen Murder Case," "The Light That Failed," "Wife Under Contract," "The Cat and the Canary," "Air Raid," "Are Husbands Necessary?" "Navy Nurse," "Lady Eve," "The Star Maker," with Bing Crosby; "Knights of the Round Table," "The Amazing Marriage," "Invitation to Happiness," "The World's Applause," "Follow the Sun," "Lives of a Texas Ranger," "Disputed Passage,' "Untamed" and "What a Life."

One of the first series-producers to be signed by Paramount for 1939-40 was Harry Sherman, who this week contracted to make six "Hopalong Cassidy" and two Zane Grey pictures, the "Hopalongs" continuing with William Boyd.

Schaefer Starts Windup Of RKO Playdate Sales

Following designation by the company of January 28th to June 2nd as an 18-week "George Schaefer Drive," to bring in remaining playdates for this season, the RKO president over the weekend outlined to home office and field sales officials the nature of product to come. Jules Levy, sales manager, had called the meeting at New York's Waldorf Astoria. Ned E. Depinet, vice-president, presided.

Topping the new releases are "Gunga Din," "The Great Man Votes" and "Love Affair." S. Barret McCormick, advertising manager, has set up a $200,000 publicity campaign for "Gunga Din."

Mr. Depinet reported to the delegates a substantial increase in both RKO domestic and foreign sales for 1938 over 1937. He will accompany Mr. Schaefer to Hollywood Friday for conferences with Pandro S. Berman, production chief, on plans for the remainder of the season and possibilities for next.

Universal Starts on 1939-40 Product Plans

Universal reported progress on formulation of its production policy and program for the new season, setting four serials for the year, starting with "The Oregon Trail," with Johnny Mack Brown starred and Henry MacRae producing; "The Shadow Creeps," mystery detective story; another "Buck Rogers" chapterplay, and "Conquering the Universe," starring Larry Crabbe—all running from 12 to 15 chapters.

First indication of Universal's feature plans also came this week with the formation of Famous Productions, Inc., in Hollywood, by Harry Edington, who disposed of his talent agencies in California to produce from four to six features annually, for Universal release. In addition, he will arrange financing for other companies in which, he said, stars, directors and writers will share in the profits.

Mr. Edington sold his Harry Edington-Frank Vincent and Famous Artists agencies to Mr. Vincent and Charles K. Feldman. Formerly a production executive with MGM, he handled the affairs of Greta Garbo, Ann Harding, Gladys Swarthout, Grace Moore, Nelson Eddy and others.

His production headquarters will be at Universal city. There Nate Blumberg, president; W. A. Scully, general sales manager, and Joseph Seidelman, foreign manager, now are conferring on other phases of 1939-40 feature production.

Warners Put Off Product Meeting

After having determined on a series of conferences over two weeks to set 1939-40 product, Warner Brothers this week abruptly changed plans for the converging of all important home office executives on Burbank, where they were to meet Harry M. Warner, president; Jack Warner, production head, and S. Charles Einfeld, in charge of advertising, the three of whom make their headquarters at the California studio. Gradwell Sears, general sales manager, instead, will lead the New York delegation westward.

The company already has finished 40 of its 52 features scheduled for the present season.

Short subject plans for 1939-40, however, get underway this week in New York with the arrival of Leon Schlesinger, to talk about next season's "Merrie Melodies" and "Looney Tunes," marking his ninth year as a Warner producer.

"HOPALONG" BOOKED IN FILM CAPITAL

Ever since Producer Harry Sherman inaugurated the "Hopalong Cassidy" western series in which William Boyd is starred, he has been attempting to get the pictures booked in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

This week after nearly four years of effort he announced that his battle had been at least partly won, for "In Old Mexico" was featured at the Hollywood theatre in Hollywood Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

Columbia and United Artists' Plans

Exhibitors again will find Joe E. Brown on Columbia's feature program, the company this week having signed the comedian to return to its studio for two years, starting with "Call Me Joe."

This year marks the beginning of an extended attempt by Columbia to market French language films in this country. The company on Monday announced a series of "Famous Foreign Features," starting with "Life Dances On," in a special division in charge of S. S. Liggett. All are released with super-imposed English titles.

Columbia's 1938-39 playdate drive opened Monday, designated as "Columbia's Personal Achievement Campaign," and to run to March 18th.

First determination of United Artists plans will begin Thursday, following the company stockholders' meeting, in Hollywood, where Maurice Silverstone, operating head; Alexander Korda, of London, and all of the producer-owners are in attendance. Mr. Korda will probably concentrate his future production in Hollywood, starting with his 1939-40 releases. These new product plans, together with the plans of Douglas Fairbanks, Edward Small and other UA associates are detailed further in column three.

Baer to Grand National For Western Series

The New Grand National will have Max Baer, prizefighter, on its 1939-40 program, Arcadia Pictures, Grand National producers, signing Baer Tuesday to appear in a series of westerns. Following the refereeing of a wrestling match next week in Boston, he will travel to Hollywood to start his first.

Arcadia Pictures will also make six Tex Fletcher westerns for Grand National.

Fine Arts, largest of Grand National's producers, will start on three others this month, and two more in February.

Al Christie, the company's short subjects producer, has set up headquarters at the Grand National studio in Hollywood. He also may produce features.

Selig, Saland, Standard, Warwick Have New Plans

A. L. Selig, New York film press agent, entered distribution this week with the acquisition of U. S. rights on the French production, "Double Crime in the Maginot Line," a spy story in which various scenes are said to have been taken in the underground chain of forts built by the French. Headquarters have been established at 729 7th Avenue, New York.

Nat Saland, president of Mercury Laboratory, New York, this week set a deal with Sam Katzman, head of Victory Pictures, under which Mr. Katzman will produce 12 features and eight westerns for 1939-40.

George Laganas, Boston shoe manufacturer, will be identified with independent production in 1939-40, this week taking over the presidency of Standard Pictures and its distributing company, succeeding Barry Richard. They will first make a series of "radio reporter" features.

Warwick Pictures, New York, on Monday announced the preparation of a series of four action features for the states rights market, including "Manhattan Shakedown," "Special Inspector," "Death Goes North" and "Murder Is News."

Korda to Produce Mainly on Coast; UA Conferences

Word from London indicates that Alexander Korda, managing director of London Films, hereafter, with the approval of his bankers, and at his own request, may concentrate most of his production activity in Hollywood.

His first film may be "Thief of Bagdad," with Jon Hall, Sabu and an American actress. Another film will be made with Merle Oberon.

United Artists executives congregated in Hollywood Thursday for a stockholders' meeting and other meetings this week involving new season product conferences and possibly a meeting of the board of directors. Also among the matters to be discussed is a new deal with Selznick-International.

Attending the sessions are Maurice Silverstone, operating head of the company; all of the UA producers, their attorneys and representatives, including those of Mr. Korda, Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., and Charles Chaplin.

James Mulvey, eastern head of the Goldwyn office; Emanuel Silverstone, business representative of Mr. Korda; James Roosevelt, Goldwyn vice-president; J. J. Milstein, business representative of Hal Roach, and Richard Dwight, of Dwight, Harris, Koegel and Caskey, attorney for Mr. Goldwyn, are on the coast for the conferences.

New York and California banks have indicated to their respective United Artists producer-clients their willingness to finance the films of these producers.

This is in addition to financing furnished to Mr. Korda by London interests, and to Mr. Fairbanks and his associates also by British interests.

Two important California banks are providing the financing for Mr. Goldwyn and Mr. Roach. Mr. Goldwyn's requirements may run to about $7,000,000, while Mr. Roach will require in the neighborhood of $4,500,000.

In New York the Guaranty Trust Company has provided financing for Edward Small Productions. It also is financing the Count and Countess Von Keller's "World Windows" short subject series for United Artists release.

Mr. Fairbank's first production venture for UA release will be "The Tenth Woman," which Raoul Walsh will direct. The budget has been set at $600,000. The second picture is to be "The Californian," with a budget estimated at $750,000. Both are to be made in Hollywood. The third picture probably will be "The Three Musketeers," to cost about $1,000,000 and will be made in either England or France.

CONGRESS REPEATS FILM ATTACKS; RETAIN TICKET TAX, PRESIDENT ASKS

Culkin Adds Provision to Prevent "Discrimination" in Favor of Affiliated Theatres; Revocation Reasons Listed

The first crop of motion picture bills proposed in Congress last week, in the first 24 hours of the new 76th session, and intended, as noted, to abolish block and blind selling and establish regulation of the industry by a federal commission, are, in pattern and intended effect, identical with measures introduced but never enacted in the preceding Congress.

An analysis made this week shows that the several block and blind selling bills, the bill for creating a Federal motion picture commission and the Daly bill for amending and consolidating the copyright acts are verbatim copies of last year's bills, changed only as to number and date of introduction.

Congressman Andrew Edmiston (Dem., W. Va.) has reintroduced his block-and-blind selling bill of last year. So has Congressman Francis D. Culkin (Rep., N. Y.) Senator Matthew M. Neely is about ready to reintroduce his old bill. In addition, Congressman Culkin resubmitted his proposal calling for a Federal Film Commission to regulate and govern the whole motion picture business, including censorship of films and supervision of production.

Would Bar "Compulsory" Blocks

Basically, all the block and blind selling bills would prohibit "compulsory" block selling, although exhibitors would not be prevented from block buying. Blind selling would be circumvented by compelling distributors to publish synopsis of each picture in advance of release. Violations would be criminal offenses, with jail terms.

The reintroduced bills have not been changed to take cognizance of any altered conditions since first written; nor do they take cognizance of the demands made by the Department of Justice in the federal anti-trust suit pending against the large companies.

Primarily, the bills were put in so that they could be brought up in committee if and when desired, in recognition of the fact that seldom, if ever, does an important measure reach the House from committee in the form in which it originally was introduced. The Neely bill in the last session was passed by the Senate without a record vote, but it failed to reach the floor of the House from committee.

Would Bar "Discrimination"

Sponsors of the new measures are prepared to amend their bills, it was said in Washington this week, or have committee changes made, to meet changes in conditions. However, Capital observers believe now that the block selling bills probably will not be taken up until the situation with respect to the Government's anti-trust suit has been clarified.

One change in the texture of the anti-blind selling proposal is an addition in the Culkin measure which also would attempt to prohibit socalled "discrimination" in favor of affiliated theatres, which is basically the intention of the Government's suit.

THEATRES EXCLUDED FROM PATMAN BILL

The legislative proposal to tax chain stores again made in Congress by Representative Wright Patman (Dem., Tex.) does not involve theatres, but applies only to retail stores "in which goods, wares or merchandise of any kind" are sold at retail.

The tax would require stores in chains of ten or more to pay from $50 per store up to 15 stores, to $1,000 a store in excess of 500 stores.

Allied States Association of Exhibitors two years ago had in mind the sponsoring of chain store taxation on circuit theatres, as part of the organization's fight against affiliated theatre circuit "aggressions," socalled.

In the Congressman's proposal for regulating the industry through a federal film commission, licenses would be required of all producers, distributors and exhibitors. All films produced would be barred from interstate commerce until licensed by the commission, and would have to be in accordance with the requirements of the proposed commission, including compliance with a list of 13 prohibitions of scenes or titles dealing with sex, religion, public officials and violence. The commission would approve all scenarios and would have representatives at the studios to supervise production—virtually a national censoring agency.

Numbered "H. R. 250," and titled "A bill to protect the motion picture industry against unfair trade practices and monopoly; to provide just settlement of complaints of unfair dealings; to provide for the manufacture of wholesome films at the sources of production, and to create a Federal Motion Picture Commission," Congressman Culkin's bill would provide criminal penalties, fines up to $10,000 and jail terms up to five years. Each day during which a violation continued would be deemed a separate offense.

Revocation Bases

The Commission could put out of business any offender, by revoking his license, and, in connection with the here-mentioned 13 prohibitions, licenses could be revoked for the production or exhibition of films;

"1. Which emphasize and exaggerate sex appeal or depict scenes therein exploiting interest in sex in an improper or suggestive form or manner;

"2. Are based upon white slavery or commercialized vice, or scenes showing the procurement of women or any of the activities attendant upon this traffic;

"3. Thematically make prominent an illicit love affair which tends to make virtue odious and vice attractive;

"4. Deal with scenes which exhibit nakedness or persons scantily dressed, particularly suggestive bedroom and bathroom scenes and scenes of inciting dances;

"5. Deal with scenes which unnecessarily prolong expressions or demonstrations of passionate love;

"6. Predominantly concern the underworld of vice and crime and like scenes, unless the scenes are part of an essential conflict between good and evil;

"7. Have stories which make drunkenness and gambling attractive, or scenes which show the use of narcotics and other unnatural practices dangerous to social morality.

"8. Deal with stories and scenes which may instruct the morally feeble in methods of committing crimes or by cumulative processes emphasize crime and the commission of crime;

"9. Have stories or scenes which ridicule or deprecate public officials, officers of the law, the United States Army, United States Navy, or other governmental authority or which tend to weaken the authority of the law;

"10. Stories or scenes or incidents which offend the religious belief of any person, creed, or sect, or ridicule ministers, priests, rabbis, or recognized leaders of any religious sect, and also which are disrespectful to objects or symbols used in connection with any religion;

"11. Stories or scenes which unduly emphasize bloodshed and violence without justification in the structure of the story;

"12. Stories or scenes which are vulgar and portray improper gestures, posturing and attitudes;

"13. Have salacious titles, and subtitles in connection with their presentation or exhibition, and the use of salacious advertising matter, photographs, and lithographs in connection therewith."

The Daly copyright proposal calls for revision, modernization and consolidation of the copyright acts. To a great extent, it resembles the Duffy copyright bill, differing only in some technical and other respects designed to take cognizance of the expected approach of television. The motion picture business has been seeking changes in the copyright law for years as a means of obtaining relief from the huge damages to which the companies are liable in plagiarism suits.

Roosevelt Urges Tax Continuance

Extension of the U. S. admission and other temporary taxes which under existing law will expire next June and July was recommended to Congress last week by President Roosevelt in his annual budget message.

Continuance of these levies, the President explained, is recommended "not because I regard them as ideal components of our tax structure, but because their collection has been perfected, our economy is adjusted to them, and we cannot afford at this time to sacrifice the revenue they represent."

If the Congress at this session should adopt new taxes more scientifically planned, he added, it is possible that the existence of these new taxes "will enable us in a later year to give consideration to abolishing" some of the present "nuisance" levies.

For the current fiscal year, the President disclosed, admission tax collections are expected to total only $18,400,000 as compared with $20,800,779 collected in the fiscal year 1938, but receipts are expected to increase to $19,200,000 during the 1940 fiscal year, which begins July 1, next.

Carried among the anticipated expenditures during the coming fiscal year are the usual items of $79,000 for motion picture activities of the Department of Agriculture and $85,000 for motion picture service for the Navy.

The Federal Communications Commission in radio is to receive an appropriation of $2,038,175, compared with $1,745,000 for the current year, but no indication was given of the purpose of the increase other than that it will be applied to salaries and expenses.

amendments to the tax laws, from Congress, their purpose being to alleviate heavy income tax payments by actors and actresses, and social security payments. Plans are for Frank Gillmore, president of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America, to go to Washington this week to confer with Senator Robert F. Wagner.

Fight Use of Industry As Target for Taxes

With the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, under P. J. ("Pete") Wood, leading the fight, Ohio exhibitors are arrayed against the proposals in the new legislature which would increase the three per cent state admission tax. Representatives of the smaller counties urge further taxation of the industry, because, according to their line of thought, "it is such a wealthy industry, and ought to pay more of the cost of government." Ohio exhibitors are appealing to their senators and representatives.

In Colorado, the absence of any bill in the new legislature, directly attacking the industry, is tempered by a proposed one per cent state income tax, the progress of which exhibitors are now watching.

The introduction of a chain store tax bill in the Oklahoma legislature is being watched by Oklahoma exhibitors. It has the backing of the Oklahoma Independents, Inc.

May Kill Blue Laws In Vermont and Ontario

Exhibitors in certain sections may expect "fair and clear" weather on Sundays.

In Vermont, the legislature, in biennial session, is expected to consider the repeal of the ancient state Sunday closing laws.

In Ontario, Premier Hepburn and Attorney General Conant have placed themselves on record in favor of "open Sundays." The Premier said, "our blue laws are in need of complete overhauling." The attorney general declared, "It is far better that our people should have an opportunity for some recreation and amusement than that they should be compelled to pass the whole day under the restraint that now exists."

In Philadelphia, Magistrate McBride freed 19 theatre managers from charges of violating the law by giving shows after midnight on New Year's Eve. The law forbids the opening of theatres before 2 P. M. on Sunday.

New York Legislature Considering New Bills

Proposals for abolition or restriction of highway billboard advertising; for two men in a booth throughout the state; for reduction or cancellation of the American Society of Composers and Publishers taxes for revision of the laws appertaining to projectionists—these and other legislative "interferences" are being introduced and may be hatched in the present session of the New York State legislature, in Albany.

The efforts to restrict billboard and all outdoor advertising have taken form in the Stagg-Todd bill, backed by Assemblyman Joseph P. Teagle, Assemblywoman Jane Todd, Senators John J. Howard and C. Tracey Stagg.

The battle against outdoor advertising received publicity in the state Constitutional Convention, where it was almost successful, the vote being 75 to 73. New York City Commissioner of Parks Robert Moses has long campaigned against outdor advertising, and so have members of Governor Lehman's "cabinet." The Governor's message opening the legislature is interpreted as his approval of such a bill.

Under consideration by the Cities Committee of the Assembly is a bill introduced by Assemblyman Robert J. Crews amending the general city law pertaining to projection, by requiring persons threading motion picture apparatus for operation in first class cities to have licenses, and also requiring operators to give full time to their apparatus.

In Denver, Colo., several theatre managers, led by Harry Huffman, city manager for Fox, have requested the City Council to require all non-theatrical exhibitors, such as schools and churches, to employ licensed operators. In support of the request, Mr. Huffman pointed out the number of people employed by the industry, and the taxes its pays, and asked that, "in justice," the non-theatrical operators assume their "proper" tax and legal burdens.

Chance Games Lose More Ground

Chance games are losing more ground. A test case was started in Plymouth County, Mass., to determine the legality of Bank Night; a judge in Terryville, Conn., ruled that Entertainment Night is a lottery; Milwaukee exhibitors advised officials that they will discontinue the games providing churches and other organizations did likewise, and the City of Quebec started an anti-Bank Night drive.

Meanwhile Charles Skouras, National Theatres operating head, said in New York this week that the "no giveaway" policy at the 195 theatres in the west coast division of National will continue indefinitely. Mr. Skouras said that the elimination of the games stimulated managers to a full use of showmanship.

The first step in the Plymouth County, Mass., test case was the arrest of Roy Heffner, Jr., manager of the Key theatre, Middleboro, and son of Roy Heffner, Sr., Bank Night distributor for New England, on the charge of conducting a lottery. Mr. Heffner, Sr., said that the game had been held not to be a lottery by the Massachusetts superior court and the United States circuit court of appeals in Boston.

Ruling that Entertainment Night comes under the state laws against lotteries, Judge Origen S. Seymour of the Connecticut court of common pleas dismissed the breach of contract suit brought by Reviewers, Inc., against J. W. Faith, operator of the Mayfair, Terryville. The decision was based on a ruling by the supreme court of errors in a Bank Night test case.

In Milwaukee 24 theatres affiliated with the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin advised their county law enforcement officials that they will discontinue chance games providing that churches, fraternal and beneficent societies also halt the games.

Bingo and all other games with the exception of Bank Night have been discontinued in Syracuse, N. Y., it is reported. William Rapp, chief of police for that city, is said to have issued the order banning the games.

Judge Brown Harris of the circuit court in Kansas City has dismissed the test suit against R. W. McEwan, Bank Night distributor. The case was filed in May, 1936, by the Kansas City prosecutor's office. In June, 1936, Judge Mario D. Waltner of the circuit court held that Bank Night was not a lottery and sustained a demurrer.

The prosecutor's office appealed to the state supreme court. Last year the court reversed Judge Waltner's opinion. Mr. McEwan's attorney filed for a rehearing, but this recently was denied.

Approval of New RKO Financing Due This Week

Federal Judge William Bondy was expected to sign the approval order this week in New York City Federal Court, marking the final emergence of RKO from Section 77B and its reorganization under the plan proposed by the Atlas Company and its adherents. The plan may still be subject to delay even after the signing, inasmuch as one of its provisions allows those who have consented to the plan to withdraw within three weeks after a newspaper advertisement insertion of which follows the approval.

Last minute changes and further suggestions by counsel for minority stockholders and others, have delayed the signing of the approval, as they have delayed RKO's emergence from receivership for several months. The latest proposal came from Carlos Israels, of White and Case, attorneys for the Unsecured Creditors Committee, who on Monday served a federal court order, offering a change in the sentence structure of a provision suggested last week by Judge Bondy, on the first dividend of the new stock.

This provision was for the first dividend on the new preferred stock to be "not more than 50 cents per month for the period beginning one year after the first day of the calendar month succeeding that in which the plan is confirmed, and ending with the next dividend date."

The suggested change, which was adopted Monday, was for the wording on part of the above to read: "receive dividends accruing from and after February 1, 1940."

Colonel Hamilton C. Rickaby, counsel for the Atlas Corporation, presented the order for settlement to Judge Bondy, for signature on Saturday. Certain portions of this document were criticized by John S. Stover, attorney for the Stirn interests.

W. Sorg, as agent of the Irving Trust Company, trustee of RKO, Tuesday filed a list of debentures and other obligations totaling $10,450,800 inspected by him, which accompanied filed consents to the plan of reorganization. This procedure, according to Mr. Sorg's statement, filed with the list, is required in lieu of physical presentation of the debentures to Judge Bondy.

Irving Trust filed a list of 13 executory contracts of RKO and four unexpired leases of RKO which have been rejected and surrendered.

There will be another hearing on January 26.

New Pathe Plan Due For Vote February 16

Under consideration now is a new plan for reorganization of the assets of Pathe Film Corporation, with the plan scheduled to go before the stockholders for their perusal on January 16th, and to go before them for the necessary two-thirds vote on February 16th.

Principal features of the new plan are the creation of a subsidiary to divorce the laboratory business from the rest of the company's affairs, and the distribution of dividends from the company's du Pont Film Manufacturing stock to the stockholders.

INDUSTRY RENEWS EFFORT TO EFFECT PROGRAM FOR SELF REGULATION

Distributors Resume Conferences with Exhibitors on 16-Point Draft; Tentative Proposals Expected to Be Basis

Negotiations were resumed this week between representatives of organized distributors and of exhibitors on a set of practices and the machinery for enforcing them to self-regulate the normal business relations between both.

The instrument in hand is a 16-plank program, advanced as a "tentative draft" by the majors for consideration of the exhibitors, and written by the distributors' negotiating committee, early in December. Action on the draft had been deferred until this week to enable Allied States Association, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and unaffiliated state exhibitor organizations to study the document thoroughly. Out of that study came various objections and rejections, which now are the subject of discussion and adjustment.

However, while not acceptable in its entirety to all organized exhibition factions, the present draft is considered in some industry quarters to be the basis of the program that in all likelihood will be adopted, after revisions and elaborations.

Four Bases of Objections

Basically objected to by various exhibitor groups are: (1) The "vague phraseology" of the text of the draft—they are now seeking clarification, a more definite expression of the distributors' "concessions"; (2) Lack of definite provisions for rules and machinery for local "conciliation" boards by which most of the program would be enforced; (3) The draft's provision for enforcement as of next season, whereas the MPTOA, for one, demands it becoming effective immediately upon enactment; and, (4) several socalled "minor" provisions, such as "plank" 14, concerning the falsification of box office receipts, which, exhibitors say, is a reflection on their honesty.

With the foregoing and other disputed parts of the program on the agenda committees of the distributors and the exhibitors went into official discussion this week with both sides expecting to bargain.

A formula of procedure for arbitrating distributor-exhibitor disputes under self-regulation, that would satisfy Governmental legal requirements is one of the principal problems confronting the distributors' legal and executive negotiators.

Unaffiliated Units Confer

First to confer with distributors were state exhibitor units unaffiliated either with Allied or MPTOA. They started their negotiations Tuesday, with S. R. Kent, Twentieth Century-Fox; W. F. Rodgers, MGM; Ned Depinet, and George Schaefer, RKO, acting for the distributors. The meetings were at the Union League Club in New York, and although neither side would divulge the nature of conversations, as agreed, word seeped through that a definite pattern for a program was being constructed. Leading the independents were New York's Independent Theatre Owners Association, the Rocky Mountain Theatre Owners Association, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia, Intermountain Theatres Association and the Independent Theatre Owners of Los Angeles.

Previous to the resumption of negotiations this week, the unaffiliated ITOA of New York, Rocky Mountain unit of Denver, ITO of Los Angeles and Allied of the Northwest had rejected the majors' draft entirely or in part, while the United Motion Picture Theatre of Pennsylvania and the MPTO of Buffalo had accepted it, with the recommendation that it be made effective at once.

The next to renew negotiations was the MPTOA, which is insisting on a clarification of phraseology, immediate enforcement and provision for local conciliation boards.

MPTOA Members Meet

On Wednesday members of the MPTOA's negotiating committee, headed by Edward L. Kuykendall, of Mississippi, conferred prior to their meeting with the distributors on Thursday. The MPTOA's committee is composed of Charles Williams, Omaha; L. C. Griffith, Oklahoma City; Oscar Lam, Rome, Ga.; Arthur Lockwood, Middletown, Conn.; H. V. Harvey, San Francisco, and Lewen Pizor, Philadelphia.

Here, too, the conferees expressed optimism over the eventual results.

Acting for the distributors were Mr. Kent, Mr. Schaefer and Mr. Depinet.

The formal and official position of Allied on the present draft will be determined Tuesday at a meeting of the organization's negotiating committee and board of directors in Washington's Carlton hotel.

Abram F. Myers, board chairman, said at the time the draft was issued that while it had advanatges "it does not represent the end of the road (of Allied's campaign for adjustments), "nor is it self-executing, and it doesn't mean that in it exhibitors will find every solution." Certain Allied groups have been insisting upon theatre divorcement from exhibition and the elimination of block selling.

The organization's position is expected to be made known Tuesday, and with that possibility several representatives of the distributors' negotiating committee may be on hand at Washington to confer immediately with Allied leaders.

Allied to Decide Trade Program and Elect Officers at 10th Anniversary Meet

SUNDAY is the tenth anniversary of Allied States Association of Exhibitors, as presently constituted. The occasion will be observed as a "Founder's Day" dinner on Tuesday evening at the Carlton Hotel in Washington, the city from which the organization's present-day activities are directed.

Allied's real beginnings, before the "final" organization, came quite unexpectedly on a Wednesday morning, May 23, 1923, in Chicago, at a national convention of the now competitive MPTOA, when "Fighting Al" Steffes from the Northwest, intent on electing James C. Ritter, of Michigan, to the presidency, was out-maneuvered and the MPTOA remained under control of Sydney S. Cohen, of New York. Steffes and Ritter bolted, and went out to form another national organization, which, after some six years, finally evolved into the Allied States of today, with Mr. Steffes, H. M. Richey, James Ritter, Colonel H. A. Cole, B. D. Cockrill, Herman Blum, Glenn Cross, Charles L. Casanave and Andy Gutenberg figuring in the formation, the six first-named actually underwriting Allied, the three last-named working on organizing, besides others. Tuesday evening's dinner will honor those survivors.

On Monday, Allied's trade practice negotiating committee, composed of Mr. Cole, chairman; Mr. Steffes, and Nathan Yamins, Allied president; Sidney Samuelson, New Jersey, and Ray Branch, Michigan, will report to the directors their recommendations on the major's tentative draft for self-regulation. The board, in turn, will then vote an official Allied attitude, which is expected to reject at least some of the program's 16 planks and propose others.

Almost certain to come up for board discussion, if not actual formal action, are the present prominent industry subjects of the Government's anti-trust suit and motion picture legislation in Congress and the states.

Election of national Allied officers and selection of the time and place of the next Allied national convention are also on the agenda, with Nathan Yamins, incumbent, expected to be reelected to the presidency, and Minneapolis, Indianapolis, or Atlantic City the likely selection for the convention city.

Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount vice-president, who has been in Hollywood since December 1st, serving as coordinator between the company's studio and New York office, arrives in New York Friday morning for several days of conferences with company executives.

Warner Campaign

Warner Brothers on Wednesday decided upon a national cooperative exhibitor newspaper advertising drive and a national fan magazine and general publication campaign for "They Made Me a Criminal," January 28th release.

BUSINESS IS UP 33% IN IRELAND, SAYS McNALLY

Production Code Enforcement Has Reduced Censorship, Says RKO Manager, on Visit

The Irish are very touchy about films from America and England which portray them in their native habitat, just as Americans are sensitive about the English films in which English actors attempt to imitate American mannerisms, but the Production Code has done much to reduce censorship in general, according to Walter McNally, RKO manager for Ireland. Mr. McNally returned last week to Ireland, after a hurried visit here. (Picture in Pictorial Section).

Mr. McNally, onetime American actor, distributor in Ireland for RKO product since 1930, and operator of Ireland's largest theatre circuit, said business in the past year showed an improvement of 33 per cent over 1937, and prospects for 1939 are even better.

When "Smiling Irish Eyes," which starred Colleen Moore, was shown in Dublin, several years ago, the irate patrons nearly tore the roof off the theatre, Mr. McNally said.

"Every other word she'd come out with a 'shure' and a 'begorra,' and that is more than an Irishman can stand. Between these overdone Irish expressions, her American twang would sound out. It is the sort of implied insult that you can see in English films which portray American gangsters, and do it very badly and inaccurately.

"I was pretty worried when 'Peg O' My Heart,' with Marion Davies, came into the country. However, she did pretty well, and there was no trouble."

Escaped Strict Censorship

RKO so far has escaped the strict Irish censorship, he said. "We have never lost a picture of any consequence through that source," he said, but added that other companies had not been so fortunate, citing "Mannequin," "Scarface," "Broadway Melody."

In Ireland the censor is appointed by the Minister of Justice, a cabinet member, the same way judges are appointed; he is regarded as practically a member of the bench, his post is "fairly permanent." The present censor has been there 20 years.

Mr. McNally noted that American and British films received about equal treatment at the censor's hands and added that it was not necessary for the censor to reject foreign-language films because the high tariff and the public dislike of them precludes the importation of much foreign fare.

Credits Production Code

Enforcement of the Production Code at the Hollywood source has eliminated much of the problem of censorship of American pictures in Ireland, according to Mr. McNally.

"My theatres get only the best pictures on the best play dates," he observes. "The competition regards this as a natural circumstance and has never complained.

Mr. McNally reported that theatre building is active there despite a heavy Government amusement tax, amounting to one-third of the gross receipts of average first run houses and about 30 per cent of the gross of subsequents. Admission scales range from 11 cents to $1.00.

"What really stops the importation of foreign films," he said, "is a tax on them of six cents a foot. Of course, it applies to American films also. But the appeal of American films, which are more popular than the British, makes it profitable to import them, regardless. The British are favored by a reduction in the tariff to four cents a foot; but the poor quality of the majority makes American films preferred in a proportion of about ten to one.

"We import all the RKO American films, and some of the British RKO quota pictures, a total of 45 to 50 per year."

The conflicts in America between independent and circuit operators have no duplication in Ireland, he pointed out, because "We have no large chains, such as you have here. My own circuit is the largest in the country," he explained, "with three houses in Dublin, one of which, the Capitol, has 2,200 seats, and was controlled by Paramount until a few years ago; the Pavilion in Cork; a new house in Waterford, a town of 28,000, which we opened a year ago at a cost of about $200,000; and with a large house, the Savoy, in Galway, a town of 20,000.

None of the Irish circuits has any English connections, he noted.

All the large companies are represented in Ireland, Mr. McNally pointed out. Warners and First National have separate offices. The English distributors are Pathe, British Lion, Associated British Film Distributors, Associated British Pictures. Pathe handles the Monogram product.

Mr. McNally, a native of Scranton, Pa., and old friend of M. E. Comerford and M. J. O'Toole, went to Ireland for his health many years ago, married and entered the theatre business there. He returned to America to go on the stage after the World War and played the old Orpheum Circuit for many years. He was a member of "The Student Prince" which played a record 53 weeks at the Great Northern, Chicago.

He returned to Ireland with the advent of sound as agent for Pat Casey's Synchro sound system; then became RKO's sales representative when the company decided to open its own office in Ireland. This is his first American trip in three years. He was called by the illness of his father, who died in Cleveland early this week.

Exhibitors Again Look to Vaudeville

Both in New York and Chicago, vaudeville again appears to be imminent as a neighborhood theatre attraction. In some houses, the policy is being used successfully, and plans are being formulated for its use in several theatres.

In New York, the Brandt circuit, which has been anxious for some time to reinaugurate vaudeville in its almost two dozen houses which are suitable for stage shows, this week publicly announced its intention of starting the project January 21 at the Windsor Theatre, 315 East Fordham Road, in the Bronx.

In Chicago, vaudeville is being used by the Oriental Theatre, operated by Jones, Link, and Schaefer; by the Stratford, under Warners; by the Balaban and Katz Norshore. Other Warner houses are "experimenting," and there are reports of B. & K.'s intention of installing acts in the Uptown, Southtown, and other of their theatres.

United Exhibitors Reelect Pizor

Lewen Pizor has been reelected president of the United Motion Picture Theatre Owners. Others officers reelected were George P. Aarons, secretary; Charles Segall, chairman of the board; Morris Spiers, treasurer; Ed Jeffries, first vice-president, and William Greenfield, second vice-president.

In addition board members reelected include Abe Sablosky, Sam Shapiro, Herman Coane, Ted Schlanger, Bud Hissner, Mike Egnal, Ray O'Rourke, Joe Hebrew, C. Floyd Hopkins, Harry Waxman, Ed Connelly, Sam Stiefel, Henry Friedman, Joe Wodock, Ben Shindler, Ralph Sobelson, Lew Segall, Mike O'Toole, Oscar Stiefel, Morris Stiefel, George Lessey, Thomas Brislen, R. J. Budd, John Monroe, Leo Posel and M. B. Ellis.

The first of three regional meetings by New York Allied was held this week at the Statler Hotel in Buffalo. Others are scheduled for January 23rd in Albany and January 25th in Syracuse.

At the Buffalo meeting Albert Francis was elected regional vice-president; Howard Lurie was named director and Minna Goldrosen was chosen as secretary.

The mid-winter convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia will be held at the Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., February 6th.

The annual meeting of the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin, originally slated for January 24th has been postponed to give exhibitors an opportunity to consider the trade pact proposal for the industry before voting on it at the meeting.

Uniform Service Fee For Production Code

Uniform service fees for maintenance of the Production Code Administration have been established by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America's board of directors for both domestic and foreign made pictures, it was said at the Hays office this week. The fee for foreign made pictures formerly was half that for domestic productions, whether made by MPPDA member producers or not.

All fees are based on the cost of individual productions, being scaled upward from a minimum charge of $25 for a $25,000 domestic production. The minimum fee for a foreign made picture formerly was $12.50. The change was made as a result of the increasing number of high cost pictures being made by member producers under the British quota act.

Laganas Heads Standard

George Laganas, Boston shoe manufacturer and a newcomer to the motion picture business, has taken over the presidency of Standard Pictures and its distributing company. He succeeds Barry Richards as president. Others replaced are Harvey Leavitt, general manager, and Charles B. Taylor of the board of directors. Mr. Laganas also is treasurer of both corporations and Mrs. Laganas is secretary. Mr. Richards and Mr. Leavitt will remain until the first of a series of "radio reporter" pictures is made.

U. S. Cinema Is Strangling Itself, Nichols Says at Awards Broadcast

Censuring Hollywood in his presentation of the annual New York newspaper film critics' awards, Dudley Nichols, president of the Screen Writers' Guild, in a broadcast from New York last Sunday, said, "Hollywood, in its fear of losing profits by making enemies, in its mad desire to appease the prejudices of every group, has submitted to an ever tightening censorship under which it becomes impossible to deal with reality. The field of picture writing has been fenced in until the pasture is dry. The American cinema is strangling under a rope which it helped to put around its own neck and it seems to me that it is up to the critics to cut it down and make it live again."

Acting as master of ceremonies in the NBC broadcast, Mr. Nichols awarded prizes on behalf of the critics to the English-made "The Citadel," for the best picture; to "Grand Illusion," for the best foreign language film; to Alfred Hitchcock of London, for the best direction, in "The Lady Vanishes"; to James Cagney, "best actor of the year" for his work in "Angels with Dirty Faces"; to Margaret Sullavan, "best actress" for "Three Comrades," and to "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," which received a special prize as it was not eligible to compete for the "best picture" title because it was a cartoon.

After Mr. Nichols' announcement of the awards, the program was switched to Paris, whence Jean Renoir and Erich von Stroheim, who directed and acted in "Grand Illusion," respectively, were heard. Then Alfred Hitchcock read a scene from "The Lady Vanishes," from London, after which the program returned to New York, where Cagney acted a scene from "Angels with Dirty Faces." Switching to Hollywood, the show presented Miss Sullavan, who read a scene from "Three Comrades." In conclusion, Walt Disney came on the air to add "All I can say is, thanks a lot."

The broadcast and formal presentation of the awards over the air came as the culmination of a cocktail party given by the critics in the Rainbow Room in Rockefeller Center, and attended by more than 400. Present as members of the critics circle were Howard Barnes, New York Herald Tribune; Frank Nugent and Bosley Crowther, of the New York Times; Kate Cameron (Loretta King), Wanda Hale and Dorothy Masters, all of the Daily News; Leo Mishkin, Morning Telegraph; Archer Winsten and Irene Thirer, Post; William Boehnel, World-Telegram; Bland Johaneson, Daily Mirror; Herbert Cohn, Brooklyn Daily Eagle, and David Platt, The Daily Worker.

Among the screen and stage notables present were Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Luise Rainer, Elsa Lanchester, J. Edward Bromberg, Rex O'Malley, Nancy Carroll, James Cagney, Robert Morley, Walter Abel, Richard Carlson and Zorina.

Mr. Nugent in the Sunday Times said of the critics' awards:

"To say that these awards represent final truth and final justice is as absurd as attributing those qualities to any or all lists of the best ten. The verdict of eighteen newspaper critics is no more reliable than the verdict of one of them, although it may carry more authority. Proof of the matter is that no award was made by a unanimous vote. Mr. Hitchcock won on the first ballot and so did "Snow White," but nine ballots were required to give Mr. Cagney the necessary two-thirds majority, it took seven to elect "Grand Illusion," four to choose "The Citadel," four to give Miss Sullavan her scroll. There were valiant challengers in each competitive class and the log-rolling, lobbying and vote-trading that went on in the traditional smoke-filled room were shameful and very funny."

Commerce Bureau Changes Awaited In Washington

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

Appointment by President Roosevelt of Harry Hopkins, formerly relief administrator, as head of the Department of Commerce to succeed Secretary Daniel C. Roper, retired, may be the forerunner of a new reorganization of that branch of the Government, it is believed in Washington.

Thoroughly changed in 1933 as the Roosevelt Administration sought to eradicate all vestiges of the Hoover regime, the Department of Commerce during the past five years has decidedly not been a potent force in the building up of U. S. foreign trade, although Secretary Roper, in his final report, cited an "appreciation" of $50,000 in profits to the film industry through the efforts of his foreign service in securing changes of attitude by foreign censors toward specific motion pictures.

More recently, the department has been further stripped of importance by setting up as independent agencies two formerly outstanding branches, the Maritime Commission and the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

With the departure of Secretary Roper, an opportunity is seen for the State Department to realize its long-time ambition of having the foreign service of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce transferred and made a part of the consular service, which took over much of the former's work several years ago.

Consular officials and commercial attaches are engaged in much the same type of work, it is pointed out, that of protecting American business interests and finding opportunity for increased American sales abroad. The State Department never has been satisfied with the division of the field, holding that frequently the commercial agents have worked at cross-purposes with the consular officials.

Both departments have worked diligently and well for the motion picture industry. The Department of Commerce, through its motion picture division and its agents abroad, has kept the industry abreast of foreign developments; the State Department repeatedly has interested itself in the difficulties encountered by the industry as a result of quota, tariff and other barriers, particularly in Europe.

Transfer of the commercial foreign service to the State Department, it has been emphasized, would mean no diminution in the efforts of the Government to protect our film or other trade, but would bring about a coordination of effort which, with even the best intent, has not been possible under the present setup.

FCC to Report on the Investigation of ATT

A report on the three-year $1,500,000 investigation of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company activities, including those in the motion picture business, will be sent to Congress this session, the Federal Communications Commission stated this week in its annual report. The telephone report probably will not be ready until late this spring.

The FCC, the annual statement revealed, is making a study of methods of organizing all communications facilities, including radio, telephone and telegraph services, to provide for their prompt and efficient use in the event of any sectional or national emergency.

Cite Role of Film and Radio In Educational Needs

Motion pictures and radio must both play an increasingly important role in modern education, with the solution perhaps to be found in the encouragement of Hollywood, by educational commissions, in the making of suitable films with a market guaranteed them. That, in the opinion of Dr. Elizabeth Laine, author of the volume on motion pictures and radio, one of the 10 studies published by the Regents Inquiry into the Character and Cost of Public Education in the State of New York, may help solve some of the problems confronting educators.

Dr. Laine's book was presented to the trade press at a luncheon on Monday, presided over by Dr. Luther Gulick, director.

Weisman Offers Plan to Liquidate Fox Theatres Corp.

Possible approval within two weeks by Martin F. Manton, federal judge, of attorney Milton Weisman's plan for liquidation of the Fox Theatres Corporation, is expected to bring that company out of receivership, after seven years. Mr. Weisman's plan, if adopted, will end his receivership, and transfer the company's assets to two trustees, to be appointed by the judge.

Earlier this week a closed hearing was held on a legal point in the plan, and objectors were allowed until this Thursday to file briefs. It is understood that the objections do not affect the plan basically.

The plan calls for liquidation gradually, depending on market conditions. It names four creditor classes: tax and receivership creditors, preferred participants and participants. The first two classes would be paid fully by the trustees. The court is to determine the claims of the preferred participants; they will then be given non-interest bearing preferred participating certificates for the face amount of their claims, less dividends already paid. These certificates will be gradually retired; on completion of this retirement, general creditors will receive similar certificates, and be paid on a pro-rata basis.

The company's current assets, as of November 30, are listed at $150,785, and investments of its four wholly owned subsidiaries at $358,957. It also has a claim against William Fox for $7,500,000. Its total liabilities are listed at $8,100,350, and there is a contingent claim of William Fox for $7,186,000.

Mr. Weisman asserted that his liquidation plan does away with administration expenses. The filing of consents by stockholders is not believed necessary. Mr. Weisman added that immediate sale of the assets at a reasonable price was "impossible" because of poor business and the Government anti-trust action.

Film Board Installs Officers

Officers for 1939 of the New York Film Board of Trade were installed Wednesday at the board's office in the Paramount Building. The officers are Harry Hummell, president; Edward H. Bell, first vice-president; Robert J. Fannon, second vice-president; Jack Bowen, treasurer; Myron Sattler, secretary, and David A. Levy, sergeant-at-arms. The meeting was followed by a dinner at the Diamond Horseshoe.

James Roosevelt on Coast

James Roosevelt, new vice-president of Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., Ltd., arrived at the company's studio Monday for a stay of several weeks. Mr. Roosevelt, Joseph Schenck and Tyrone Power flew to San Francisco Wednesday to attend a luncheon in the interests of President Roosevelt's infantile paralysis drive.

KMTA To Seek Anti-Ascap Measures

Introduction of anti-Ascap measures in both the Missouri and Kansas legislatures is proposed by the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association in conjunction with a new organizational membership drive. The association's present membership includes about 400 of the 600 theatres in the territory but it hopes to add the remaining 200 to gain complete exhibitor backing for the proposed legislation.

Radio Artists Walk Out Of Parley with Agencies

Negotiations between the American Federation of Radio Artists and the American Advertising Agency Association, which had been going on for a year, reached an impasse Tuesday when representatives of AFRA walked out of a conference with the AAAA. The latter had submitted a memorandum containing a minimum scale of payment for artists and announcers working in sponsored network programs, which was stated by AFRA to be below the scale now existing, and flatly rejected. The AFRA representatives, Emily Holt, George Heller, Sam Jaffe, Mark Smith, Alex McKee, Nelson Case and Jean Hersholt, walked out of the meeting 15 minutes after the AAAA had submitted its proposal.

Further action to be taken by AFRA was to be determined in a board meeting Thursday.

Censors Appointed In Two States

Two cities have made changes in their censor staffs. The New York State Department of Education has added a motion picture inspector and a reviewer to the censor board. Frank B. Dermody was appointed a reviewer and Mrs. Rosalie Cherlov has been named inspector. Mrs. William E. Estes of the films committee of the Parent-Teachers Association in Kansas City, has been named assistant city censor to succeed Mrs. Eleanore Walton, who now is city censor.

A resolution adopted by the Ohio State Educational Association at its 17th annual convention in Columbus provides for a constitutional amendment to create a state board of education which would name the state director of education now appointed by the Governor. The educational director is the ex-officio head of the censor board.

Mae Clausen, chairman of the Kansas State Board of Review, said this week that the board had reduced per reel censorship fees on original prints from $2 to $1. Authority for adjusting the fees is conferred by the Kansas censorship law, which, however, makes the maximum $2 per reel. No change has been made in the $1 per reel charge on copies.

Milton Farber, attorney, Columbus, Ohio, representing Amkino Corporation, New York, distributors of the Russian-made film, "Professor Mamlock," has asked the Ohio censors to again review the film, in an effort to get them to reverse their previous decision to ban the film from the state.

The Ohio censor board has passed the film "Million of Us," held up since November, 1937. There were only a few minor deletions, the board reported. The action was brought in district court in Columbus by Garrison Film Corporation, distributors, to force acceptance or rejection.

The Ohio censors reviewed a total of 494 reels in December, from which 57 eliminations were ordered. Ten reels were rejected. This compares with 665 reels reviewed, 47 eliminations ordered, and 16 reels rejected in November, while in December, 1937, there were 701 reels reviewed with 30 eliminations.

During 1938, there was a total of 6,213 reels reviewed and 365 eliminations ordered. The 1937 figures are 7,487 reels and 397 eliminations.

Lenauer International Films, Inc., distributors in this country of the French film, "Le Puritan," has filed an appeal to the Board of Regents of New York for a review of the film. The picture was rejected by Motion Picture Director Irwin Esmond.

Impasse Reached In Conference With Musicians

Conferences among leaders of the American Federation of Musicians and industry executives, held this Wednesday in the New York offices of Pat Casey, motion picture industry labor arbitrator, again reached an impasse, and the next conference was set for April 17. Joseph M. Weber, president of the AFM, and his entire executive board sat down with Joseph Hazen, of Warners; Sidney Kent, 20th Century-Fox; Leonard Picker, of Columbia; Harry Buckley, of United Artists; George Schaefer, of RKO; Nate Blumberg of Universal; and Barney Balaban, of Paramount.

Their announced purpose, as it has been for several months now, was to find a means of reemploying musicians whose lack of work is ascribed to the advent of sound films. The musicians have been talking a "tax on footage," reemployment in stage shows in all theatres with stages; and like solutions. They are expected to discuss the matter further in their Miami executive council meeting beginning Monday.

According to Mr. Casey, the Wednesday meeting resulted only in the agreement by all that more "exploratory" talks were necessary. Said Mr. Casey, after the meeting:

"We've arrived at nothing as yet; nothing was agreed upon; and certainly we haven't seen anything yet which could be a solution. And really, I don't know how they're going to get one, either. It's one of those things where you can't even get down to what to fight about."

The sickness of one of the principals made the scheduled meeting this Friday, in Mr. Casey's offices, of the motion picture company representatives doubtful. The meeting was to determine the status of various employee classes of the industry, in relation to the new Wages and Hours Law.

Complaints of the members of the Screen Writers' Guild that producers are intimidating them will be ready soon for filing with the National Labor Relations Board. Plans for 45 such complaints were drawn at a meeting Sunday on the coast, of the Guild.

An election among readers in the studios to determine whether the Guild should be their collective bargaining agency, is scheduled to be held under the auspices of the board. The Guild had filed a petition with the board asking for such an election, and the attorneys for the studios agreed to the election, but did not waive their rights to challenge the board's jurisdiction, as they are now doing.

Consults Attorneys on Third Dimension Process

Spencer Monroe, former newsreel cameraman who has been spending the last six years on a third dimension film process, is returning to New York this weekend to complete negotiations for sale of the patents on his device, after consulting attorneys in Chicago.

Two lenses are used on the camera and a system of mirrors is also part of the equipment. Standard 35mm film is used in the process, but Mr. Monroe said special projectors will be needed to show the third dimension film at its best.

THEATRE MANAGER CALLED "STEP-CHILD" IN NEWSPAPER OFFICES

Loew's Investigator Finds Wide Range of Editorial Attention Despite Greatest Reader Interest Except Comics

Newspapers which conduct "slipshod" movie pages are being attacked by exhibition, from which a demand is made for changes for the benefit of both press and theatre. It is charged "the movie manager has been dropped into the newspaper picture somewhere between the business office and the editor's desk—a stepchild of each."

Citing a reader interest for "good" movie pages topping all other departments or special pages in newspapers except comics, Loew's, Inc., one of the biggest advertisers of motion pictures, charges that with the same treatment accorded films as sports and other fields, the movie page can be developed into one of the most valuable newspaper departments, both from the standpoint of public interest and advertising revenue.

The attack against "slipshod" film pages is made by Loew's in an open message to newspaper publishers and editors in Editor and Publisher, newspaper trade publication, as written by Arthur Schmidt, advertising representative of the Loew advertising-publicity department, headed by Howard Dietz.

Arguments advanced could be used by other exhibitors and theatre advertising men on their local newspaper publishers or editors whose movie page needs revitalizing, and Loew's, through the Schmidt analysis, claims that this would benefit both newspaper and theatre.

Finds Wide Variety of Standards

Mr. Schmidt in recent months has talked of motion picture matters with a large number of newspaper publishers and executives. He found in their newspapers a wide variation of quality in movie pages, despite the fact that the Gallup and other newspaper surveys show that local movie pages have the highest reader interest rating, that, according to metropolitan newspaper lineage figures, 1938 set an all-time high in motion picture advertising, that motion pictures will be one of the few plus classifications in advertising this year, running far in excess of 1929, and that one typical survey made recently shows 72 per cent of the readers interviewed had read one or more items on a "good" movie page, this rating of 72 per cent excelling that of all other newspaper departments except comics (which had a rating of only nine points higher); sports rating 44 per cent.

Yet, Mr. Schmidt found publishers, talking "off-the-record," frankly admitting they haven't given much attention to their movie page when "it is far below the standard of the balance of the paper," conceding at the same time that it is one of the most profitable departments, and is becoming more so each year. They agreed that an attractive page requires editorial effort and expense, what with so much lively photographic material available and so many sources of news and ready-made reader-interest.

The Loew investigation concluded, basically, that the quality standard of movie pages, and the resultant reader interest and circulation appeal, is governed generally in proportion to the publisher's and editor's personal understanding of the motion picture business and liking for the movies themselves. Consequently, "the movie manager has been dropped into the newspaper picture somewhere between the business office and the editor's desk—a stepchild of each. Neither fish nor fowl, he is a strange combination of news source and advertiser."

EXPERIMENTING IN TRAILERS

National Theatres Fox West Coast circuit is experimenting with simple announcement trailers in the hope that a new kind of selling trailer may be evolved which will be different than the usual high pressure trailer.

The circuit is premising its experiments on the fact that so much advance information is given the public by the press and magazines, besides radio, that the high pressure trailer is not needed.

"The failure to rationalize this publicity and advertising business is reason No. 1 for many poor movie pages," according to Mr. Schmidt. "Editorial policy is confused by the theatre managers' dual role. The valuable local angles are neglected and the page drifts.

"Few editors, for that matter, give the movies the same interest and cooperation they give other departments. Take sports for example. Like baseball and hockey the movies are a source of reader-interest and circulation. But because the movies are advertisers some editors view movie copy, especially local copy, with doubt and suspicion. . . . "

Movies and Sports

"One recent survey showed that the sports page attracted nine per cent more male readers than the movie page. But the movie page pulled 387 percent more women readers than sports. Actually it appeals to all classes. In newspapers in the 100,000 circulation group it was found that . . . for every 100 women who read the page there were 75 men readers," the Schmidt report continued, adding:

"Another interesting finding: local motion picture ads had the highest reader-interest rating of anything on the page in one paper on theatre opening day.

"This confirms the fact that readers are interested in today's shows, and current releases. . . . Yet some editors emasculate their pages by editing out much of the local news and using uninteresting publicity blurbs. And theatre managers who furnish them with photographs and information that might be used to inject some local flavor to the page are regarded as 'space chiselers.'

Faulty "Cooperation"

"Some advertising managers will prevail on their editor to run a few meaningless blurbs from time to time 'to keep the movie theatres happy.' . . . This type of 'co-operation' . . . frequently causes the editorial department to lose interest.

"The 'how' of the movie page is strictly the editorial department's responsibility. The business office must furnish adequate payroll and white space, and naturally is entitled to look for reader results, but it's neither their job nor the theatre manager's job to run it.

"Most motion picture editors throughout the country are thoroughly competent. . . . Unfortunately, in many instances, they contribute little to the page except reviews. They are not consulted on policy or makeup of the daily page, and frequently haven't the staff to conduct it.

"In a few instances the pages are handicapped by writers who obviously dislike the movies and hate movie stars. That's a simple matter of newspaper policy. . . .

Local Flavor

"It would seem that the movie pages which are most successful and rate highest have this distinct local flavor, and in most instances play up staff writers. The Washington Post is typical. Commenting on a recent survey Managing Editor Alexander F. Jones writes: ' . . . the Gallup figures on our amusement page are an excellent illustration of the pulling power of anything pertaining to motion pictures. The daily amusement page ran 16 percent higher than the average for all other pages in the paper: some nearly as high, others much below.'

"Hollywood columns are important to a good movie page. And once more, in this writer's opinion, it is the competent and experienced newspapermen and women who went to the Coast from the desks of leading newspapers who are turning in the best columns. Publishers owe it to their readers to analyze Hollywood copy and not be stampeded into buying a lot of cheap gossip. They owe it to their advertisers, too.

Excessive Rate Cited

"Actually, if anyone is entitled to special consideration these days it is the movie theatre manager. He pays an excess rate. His copy runs 365 days in the year. His national cooperative ads come to the metropolitan papers week after week, without solicitation or even a check up by the New York representative.

"Most theatre men are sold on newspapers. Newspaper ads have directory and selling value. No other advertising medium has developed a technique so effective in selling theatre tickets. That's why theatres use them. Oscar A. Doob, advertising director of Loew's, spends more than 90 per cent of his budget in newspapers for New York and other Loew's theatres throughout the country.

"This year the space used by many theatres in metropolitan cities represents a greater proportion of the theatre gross than ever before. Linage has increased, but in many instances grosses are less than they were in 1929 and the early 1930's.

"Maybe it's just coincidence, but theatre business does seem to be better in those cities where newspapers have the highest rating reader-interest pages.

Lee Denies Interest in Canadian 16 mm. Field

Arthur A. Lee, vice-president and general manager of Gaumont British, denied reports that he has become interested in the distribution of 16 mm. films in Canada, upon his return from a Florida vacation last Sunday.

Saying that his position with GB remains unchanged, Mr. Lee added that he had been associated with the company for more than a quarter of a century, and hoped to remain with them for a similar length of time.

Lasky's "Gateway to Hollywood" described as a "talent quest" and spnsored by the Wrigley Company, manufacturers of chewing gum; and the "Screen Actors' Guild Show" sponsored by the Gulf Company, manufacturers of gasoline and allied products. Both are broadcast over the Columbia Broadcasting System network, the first at 6:30, the second at 7:30 P.M.

Government Starts Inquiry into Radio's Relations between Stations and with Companies, Newspapers and Amusements

Probing even deeper than expected into the structure of national radio broadcasting, with a view to determining the extent and nature of network monopolies, the United States Government this week started an investigation of radio's relations between stations and with communications companies, newspapers and amusements, presumably including motion pictures.

The new phase of governmental interest in the radio business was undertaken in pursuance of the inquiries of and hearings by the Federal Communications Commission, which over the weekend sent out questionnaires to more than 2,000 broadcast licensees, holding companies and other corporations holding direct and indirect stock interests and to stockholders and officers of the holding companies.

The FCC has been holding open hearings in Washington on radio operations for the last two months, taking all that time to investigate the National Broadcasting Company, and starting only this week on Columbia Broadcasting. Other than a host of statistics, the NBC phase of the hearings has produced nothing of apparent importance, according to Washington newspaper men who have been covering them.

The information now sought through the questionnaires sent out this week will be analyzed and the results presented in the testimony of the FCC's own witnesses during the present series of hearings.

Radio has relations with the motion picture business through Radio Corporation of America, which owns and operates NBC, one of the two major networks, and Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, in which it has some 50 per cent holdings. The motion picture business otherwise has no great relationship with radio, save for some independent station interests, such as Warners' station in California and the few scattered instances of exhibitor station interests in the field.

Through the questionnaires the Commission seeks particularly to determine the ultimate and interlocking ownership and control of radio stations.

Review Board's Annual Meeting February 2nd

The 15th annual conference of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures will be held February 2-4 at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York. The subject of this year's conference will be "The Making of a Motion Picture."

On the opening day five speeches will cover the first half of the subject, which has to do with script-writing, research, casting, costume and make-up, and musical accompaniment. The next day the second half of the subject will be covered by a director, photographer, sound technician, technical engineer and actor. The Junior session demonstrating phases of the 4-Star Club activity will be held February 4th.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

WITH ONE WOMAN writing a threat to kill herself if she failed to win "Movie Quiz" prize money and many thousands of other letters as queerly personal received at New York headquarters, the Motion Pictures Greatest Year campaign executives are finding it necessary to use a most diplomatic, at times psychiatric, approach to some contest answers.

Some 10,000 of these letters — straying far afield from the objective, are in hand from American moviegoers. The proposals submitted by this group varied all the way from direct requests for money, to long descriptions of poverty, sickness and desperation of the senders. Some letters revealed a consuming love for the "movies"—their senders reporting romances and adventures lived vicariously through the screen. Other entries were cunningly devised, attractively dressed. Some confessed dishonesty and a plea for "another chance"; some wanted to write in Hollywood, and, of course, there were the usual requests for screen tests. Very many sent in pictures of themselves, their families, their pets. One chap sent along photographs of all the marquees of the 30 theatres he had attended to see Quiz pictures.

A look at this group of more or less peculiar missives discloses that for the most part they were from women. Certainly those most intriguing and posing the greatest problem, namely, how to answer diplomatically, were from women.

A woman in Chelsea, Mass., complained that she sells marriage licenses "all day long" and "it can become a very sad thing when there is no one in love with you." She'll settle for a Quiz prize—"if you can't win a man you can win a prize."

Another woman from Bovey, Minnesota, sent along a snapshot of herself in the hope she might be given a screen test. She included a description of her physical charms, adding: "but my complexion is not so good."

From Grand Rol, Oregon, came the offer of a woman to place in the hands of Hollywood producers her knowledge of the hereafter. Said this seer:

"I have had a death experience. I had cured myself all alone, enough to save me from going into the hereafter altogether. I have been in both places at once or at the same time, here and in the hereafter."

Many sent with their Quiz answers large cards to which they pasted the ticket stubs from the 30 theatres they had attended in order to view the contest pictures. They felt the stubs would "prove" their attendance.

A Nashville woman enclosed a five-dollar donation with her entry, for "Father Flanagan and Boystown," apparently influenced by seeing Metro's version of "Boystown."

Another woman, from Coffeyville, Kansas, wrote that she had one adopted child, a boy, but that after seeing "Boystown" they would adopt some boys "as soon as they could."

From the male division came a letter from New London, Connecticut, admitting that the writer hadn't seen enough pictures to qualify. And this is why: "Due to the fact my wife has been ill for the past months, which resulted in an eight-pound boy, we were unable to attend more than 20 pictures." He hoped, however, to win a prize.

A widow in Minneapolis confided that she did not see all the pictures herself; her friends helped her, "thinking how nice it would be if I could win a prize to pay the doctor's bills."

Bob Benchley, writer and movie actor for MGM shorts, feels terribly squeamish over his new role of radio broadcaster. He says that when he steps up to the microphone he is reminded of Jimmy (Schnozzola) Durante, who, when a movie script was being read to him, said, "Yeah, dat sounds sort of funny here, but how about all dem people in all dem theaters?"

Michael Mok went to interview Mr. Benchley in his midtown New York hotel apartment, for the New York Post, the other day, and found the place furnished in the best bustle-and-mustache-cup style of Victorian decoration. The walls are covered with pictures of dear, good Queen Victoria.

"When I saw this furnished apartment for the first time they told me it was Victorian," explained Mr. Benchley. "So it's Victorian, is it?" he answered. "Well, I'll show you! I got tough about it and went out and really made it Victorian."

THESE first few weeks of the New Year have brought the usual press selections of "ten best" this and "ten best" that in motion pictures, and, not to be outdone, B. R. Crisler, last Sunday, noted for the staid New York Times, his own ten best of the year:

Best Lobby Slogan: Paramount's for DeMille's "Sign of the Cross": "Christians Killed in a Novel and Diverting Manner."

Most Superlative Lobby Slogan (displayed by the New York Central theatre on Broadway): "Surpasses Anything Ever Seen on Land, Sea or Sky."

Most Amusing Production Error: The inadvertent inclusion of the conventional legalistic abracadaba: "Any similarity to actual persons, living or dead, is purely coincidental" as a foreword to MGM's "Marie Antoinette."

Most Incomprehensible Ruling by the Hays Office: In the script for Paramount's "Zaza" a female character cried "Pig! Pig! Pig!" to a gentleman admirer. "Delete two pigs," was the Hays notation.

Most Self-Revelatory Statement to the Press: Mae West: "I don't know a thing about writing plays. I just sat down and wrote as I felt—and I wrote 'Sex'."

Most Incompatible Double Bill: "Tonight or Never" and "There's Always Tomorrow," at the Sutton theatre, New York.

Most Romantic Contract Concession: Sam Goldwyn's to Jon Hall, newly married to Frances Langford. Mr. Goldwyn paternally agreed to pay for one five-minute telephone call each week while Hall was in London working on "The Thief of Bagdad."

Most Candid Advertisement: The Long Island Roosevelt theatre's for "Fight to the Last" (a Chinese film), with the following trenchant quotation: "Its effectiveness cannot be underestimated."

Most Daring Producer Name: Orville Dull, of MGM.

Most Inconsequential Press Release: The announcement that Nelson Eddy had taken up wood-carving.

IN THE CUTTING ROOM

Song of the West

Semi-Western

Although not a "western" in the general meaning of the term, "Song of the West" will have a California setting of pioneer days and will contain most of the elements that have made westerns popular action entertainment. Semi-historic in theme, the story will concern itself with the struggles between the early farmer settlers and the railroad agents with their not always ethical grabbing of things.

The feature will be Nelson Eddy's first "solo" starring vehicle. Regularly with Jeanette MacDonald, he also has been seen with Eleanor Powell. He is the hero who fights the villians with their own fire. Most of his singing numbers will be topical of the early West, but "Home, Sweet Home" and "America" also are included. The cast in support is what might be called "grade A." Virginia Bruce will portray a role similar to that in which she was seen in "Bad Man of Brimstone." Lionel Barrymore will be the kind old man, and Edward Arnold, last in "You Can't Take It with You" and "The Crowd Roars," is the chief heavy. Victor McLaglen will be in a typical hard boiled role, and the principal support roles will be filled by such capable performers as Allen Jenkins, H. B. Warner, Guy Kibbee, Raymond Walburn and Sarah Padden.

The story was written by Ben Hecht, who gave the screen "The Front Page," "Scarface," "Viva Villa" and "Nothing Sacred." A Harry Rapf production, "Song of the West," is being directed by Jack Conway, who made "A Yank at Oxford" and "Too Hot to Handle."

Release date: To be determined.

Four Girls in White

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

A Nurse Story

Such pictures as "Men in White," "The White Parade" and many others down to "Young Dr. Kildare" and "The Citadel" have demonstrated that the medical and nursing professions form appealing backgrounds for human interest romance and melodrama, comedy sometimes, and usually spectacular production effects. "Four Girls in White" will include all these elements.

A hospital is the major locale. Of the four girls, one became a nurse because she thought the profession might make it easy to land a rich husband, her sister followed along because she always had tagged her elder in everythng. A third joined up because it meant a job. The fourth considered the meals in this hospital very good. The selfish girl is indirectly responsible for the death of the girl who had to work, but in the climax she proves a heroine that restores her to honor in the graduating class.

Florence Rice, last in "Sweethearts" and "Fast Company"; Ann Rutherford, one of the "Judge Hardy" group, and in "A Christmas Carol"; Una Merkel and Mary Howard, seen in "Fast Company" and "Love Finds Andy Hardy," are the featured players. Alan Marshall, now in "Dramatic School," will appear as a doctor, Kent Taylor has the second male lead and Buddy Ebsen will share comedy duties with Miss Merkel. Jessie Ralph also will be seen.

The story is an original by Nathalie Bucknall and Endre Bohan, for which Dorothy Yost did the screen play. S. Sylvan Simon, who made "Spring Madness," is directing.

Release date: January 27, 1938.

It's Spring Again

(UA - Hal Roach)

Comedy

In "It's Spring Again" Hal Roach will return to the type of comedy production which first brought him fame. That means that while the picture will have a story basis with comedy content, the real laughs will be provoked by sometimes relevant and sometimes irrelevant slapstick bits of business. The story has to do with how the boy is able to marry the right girl, despite parental objections and romantic jealousy, but included are an elephant that can't forget a kindness, a reading of the Declaration of Independence in which that paragraph stating "all men are created free and equal" is emphasized, and music by the Hall Johnson Choir.

To handle the comedy, Mr. Roach has rounded up a group of skilled fun makers, Oliver Hardy, Harry Langdon, Billy Burke, Alice Brady, Stephin Fetchit and Hattie McDaniels. Zenobia, the elephant, has never had screen credit before but he has much to do with the story. The romance will be handled by James Ellison, Jean Parker and June Lang. Important incidentals will feature the young colored boy, Phillip Hurlic, who will be remembered from the "Penrod" shows; J. Farrell MacDonald and Olin Howland. An Edward Sutherland production, the picture is being directed by Gordon Douglas, who succeeded Robert McGowan as director of the "Our Gang" shorts.

Release date: To be determined.

I Take This Woman

(MGM)

Triangle Romance

More than ordinary public and exhibitor interest is had by the heroine, Hedy Lamarr. Widely publicized before she came to this country, Miss Lamarr gave a convincing demonstration of personality and talent in "Algiers." Signed by MGM, she was made a star before appearing in a production for the company. The studio expects her to be the sensation of 1939. Her initial assignment should do much to establish that faith.

The story told in "I Take This Woman" is a triangle romance. A cafe society girl carries on an affair with a married man, but is jilted. She finds a strange (to her) happiness in love and marriage with an impoverished doctor who works in the slums. When he tries to give her the things that made her happy once, she slides back into her old ways, and is at the point of deserting her husband for her former flame when she learns how her mate jeopardized his newlyfound career for her love.

MGM has done about everything possible to assure that Miss Lamarr's first film would be a success. It has set Spencer Tracy to play the role of her husband, and Walter Pidgeon, remembered for "The Girl of the Golden West" and "Too Hot to Handle," to be the other man. Ina Claire returns to the screen for an important role and the supporting cast features Marjorie Main, Louis Calhern, Frank Puglia and George Stone. Particular attention was given to the choice of director in selecting Frank Borzage, maker of such memorable love stories as "Humoresque," the original "Seventh Heaven," "Little Man, What Now," "Three Comrades" and "The Shining Hour." The story is modern, as are all Charles MacArthur stories, and the general locale is New York, with sustaining incidents in Yucatan and aboard ship. The gowns to be worn by Miss Lamarr promise to make the production a style show of unique interest to women.

Release date: February 24, 1939.

Code of the Streets

(Tentative Title)

Melodrama

Experience has taught exhibitors that these "Tough Kid" and "Dead End Kid" pictures are designed to be mass entertainment and that their direct appeal is to youngsters. In "Code of the Streets," the youngsters, whose only law is the code of the slum streets in which they live, take the law into their own hands first to save the brother of one of their members from electrocution; second, in alliance with a policeman's son, to ferret out and force a confession from the real killer, and, third, to make it possible for their sworn enemy, a cop, to be reinstated and promoted. The story is straight melodrama and no woman is featured in the cast. The comedy is of that rough, tough brand in which street hoodlums indulge.

Universal's flexible organization of "Tough Kids" includes several "Dead Enders" and some recruits of its own. As a unit, Hally Chester, Harris Berger, Charles Duncan, William Benedict and David Gorcey have been seen recently in "Little Tough Guys in Society" and "Newsboys' Home." Other youngsters featured with them are Frankie Thomas, who was in "Boys Town" and "Little Tough Guys in Society," and James McCallion, a newcomer, who will be seen in RKO-Radio's "The Pure in Mind." The adults are Harry Carey, Leon Ames, Paul Fix and Marc Lawrence.

Harold Young, who was associated in the making of "Little Tough Guy" and "Newsboys' Home," is directing. The writer of the original story, Arthur Horman, and Gordon Kahn, who collaborated with him on the screen play, are long experienced in the preparation of melodramatic material of entertainment value.

Release date: January 27, 1939 (tentative).

The Saint Strikes Back

(RKO Radio)

Detective Melodrama

Box office returns on "The Saint in New York" having proved there is a market for Leslie Charteris' stories, RKO-Radio has decided to make "The Saint Strikes Back" the second in the series. Both feature a mysterious character, "The Saint," who might have been the greatest criminal of the age had he not dedicated his life to the abolishment of crime. In other words, "The Saint" uses crooks' methods, commits crimes, to catch crooks. In the present instance he will aid a young woman to establish her dead father's innocence of a crime for which he had killed himself, and to aid the police in capturing a sinister underworld figure.

George Sanders, with Twentieth Century-Fox in such films as "Lloyds of London," "Slave Ship" and "Four Men and a Prayer," will be seen as the "Saint," and Jonathan Hale will continue the role of "Inspector Fernack." The girl is Wendy Barrie, last in "Pacific Liner." The fourth principal is Neil Hamilton, who was in "Portia on Trial." The supporting cast includes Barry Fitzgerald, Jerome Cowan, Robert Elliott, Robert Strange and Gilbert Emery.

John Twist, who worked on "Pacific Liner," "12 Crowded Hours" and "The Great Man Votes," did the screen play for the Charteris story. The film is directed by John Farrow, who has been with Warners several years.

Release date: March 10, 1939.

Code of the Cactus

(Victory Pictures)

Action Adventure

For entertainment and commercial purposes, "Code of the Cactus" will offer a standard outdoor adventure story in which a few novelties have been incorporated. Thematically it adapts the standby standard premise: honest ranchers versus cattle rustlers. The rustlers, however, carry on the depredations with modern methods, making use of high powered trucks, machine guns and other approved screen facilities of gangsters. On the law and order side the hero assumes a dual identity—an outlaw in league with the bandits at one moment, their nemesis and friend of the cattle owners at another. The climax will not be different from the finale of 1,001 westerns, down to the chase and hand-to-hand fight.

Prime name value to be featured is Tim McCoy. Although not so active in films as he once was, yet still quite a figure in wild west carnivals and circuses, McCoy demonstrated by placing high up in the ranks of honor western stars that he still has a sizable following. His latest pictures, both for Victory, were "Lightning Carson Rides Again" and "Six Gun Trail." The supporting cast will present Ben Corbett, Dorothy Short, Ted Adams, Alden Chase, Dave O'Brien, Forrest Taylor, Bob Terry, Slim Whittaker and Frank Wayne, all active in western production.

Sam Newfield, who has handled as many western stories as any man in the business, is directing.

Release date: To be determined.

King of the Turf

(United Artists - Edward Small)

Father-Son Melodrama

While race tracks, race houses and race folk will form the background for this production, its story concentrates on human interest. After reading a script and seeing much of the picture in the making, one gathers the impression that the finished film will contain much that is reminiscent of "The Champ" and much of that man and boy relationship that made "Stablemates" such a popular attraction.

The story concerns a once glamorous racing world figure, now a drunken bum, and a boy who loved race horses. Inspired by the boy's flaming ambition, the man, though suffering occasional relapses, regenerates himself and is about to regain his once great status. At that moment he meets his former wife, who convinces him that the boy is their son and further convinces him he would be better off in her care. The boy comes back to his unknown parent, but, to separate them forever, the man conspires to have the boy ride in a crooked race, to which he agrees. But the boy, unable to be dishonest, rides to win. That is the deed that counts. Telling the boy he "hates a crook with a horse," the father slaps him and reverts to dissipation as the brokenhearted youngster returns to his mother.

Adolphe Menjou and young Roger Daniel, seen in "Lord Jeff" and "The Pure in Mind," are featured. Dolores Costello, now in Larry Darmour's "Whispering Enemies," will be seen as the boy's mother. Walter Abel, Alan Dinehart, Willian Demerest, Harold Huber and George McKay head the large supporting cast. Alfred E. Green is directing the George Bruce screen play.

Release date: To be determined.

BOOK REVIEW

PHOTOGRAPHIC CHEMICALS AND SOLUTIONS, by John I. Crabtree and Glenn E. Matthews. 360 pages, illustrated, and indexed. American Photographic Publishing Company, Boston. $4.

In the photo-technical departments of the motion picture industry the names of John I. Crabtree and Glenn E. Matthews, both of the research staff of the Eastman Kodak Company and both considerably identified with the technological affairs of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, are exceedingly well known and of authoritative standing.

This volume on which they have collaborated is a crystallization of their laboratory experiences and findings, resulting in a compilation of fundamental importance to students of the art of photography, whether still or kinematic, and of reference value to all workers in photo-chemical operations.

Despite their acute sophistication in photo-chemistry, the authors have contrived a lucid simplicity, bringing their techniques into the reach of any moderately intelligent layman, and at the same time have escaped burdening their text beyond the patience of the expert. The volume is rich with formulae and tables. It is a workbench book.

Wife, Husband and Friend

(Twentieth Century-Fox)

Domestic Comedy

Despite the title, the word combination of which has come to suggest a serious love triangle, the thematic essence of "Wife, Husband and Friend" is comedy. It will be a problem play, but one that is based on a different idea and develops its plot complications in different ways. The story concerns a mother-dominated young socialite wife who wants a musical career; a self-made business man husband, who conspires to give her one in order to get the artistic ambitions out of her system, and an assorted regiment of two-timing sirens, flirtatious maestros, squabbling in-laws, blue bloods, roughnecks and domestic hangers-on. Vocal and instrumental music is a complement of the dialogue and action which should serve the dual purpose of an added appeal for music lovers and a buildup for the several denouements.

Loretta Young, direct from "Suez" and "Kentucky," will be seen as the flighty young matron, with Warner Baxter the hen-pecked husband who becomes master of his house. Principal participants in the affairs that first drive wife and husband frantic but eventually reunite them are Binnie Barnes, Cesar Romero, George Barbier, J. Edward Bromberg, Eugene Pallette and Helen Westley.

The production is based on a novel by James M. Cain, an able delineator of the modern mass mind scene, and the screen play was prepared by Nunnally Johnson, who has a long list of credits after his name. Directing is Gregory Ratoff, most often an actor, but occasionally a director as in the case of "Lancer Spy" and "Sins of Man." Samuel Pokrass and Walter Bullock composed the music and lyrics.

Release date: February 17, 1939.

Industry Will Aid Library

The motion picture industry will take an active part in fostering the work and purpose of the Film Library of the Museum of Modern Art and will contribute financially towards the maintenance of the project, it was determined recently at a meeting of industry leaders.

There will be a specific annual contribution made to the Film Library, additional to contributions of film.

The Film Library while a separate corporation is a division of The Museum of Modern Art in New York. It was founded in May, 1935 through a grant of $120,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation. This grant has not been exhausted yet and the Library exists on these funds.

In addition there are occasionally small contributions from the trustees, and revenue derived from rentals of films. It is a non-profit institution, but hopes eventually to be self-supporting on the basis of rental revenue. Although commercial producers frequently contribute films, the films are not rented to commercial companies.

The Library is "an educational institution" which exists for the purpose of collecting and preserving representative motion pictures of all types, as well as of related materials, with the object of making them available for study.

At present the Library has between 700 and 800 films with a total footage of approximately 250,000 feet. It is affiliated as one of the four member countries with the International Federation of Film Archives. Other members are the official film libraries of England, France and Germany.

Last season, the Library circulated films to 175 U. S. institutions. They have been used by colleges and local film societies. Six series of films are available: Short survey of films in America, 1895-1930; some memorable American films, 1896-1935; films in Germany and France; Swedish and post-war American films; work of D. W. Griffith; and non-fiction films. In addition there are Great Actresses of the Past and A Short History of Animation. Books on related subjects are available at the Library.

Officers are: John Hay Whitney, president; John E. Abbott, vice-president and director; Edward M. Warburg, treasurer; Iris Barry, curator. Trustee committee consists of Mr. Whitney, chairman; A. Conger Goodyear, William S. Paley, Mr. Warburg. Advisory committee is headed by Will H. Hays. Other members of the advisory committee are Jules E. Brulatour, Stanton Griffis, Sidney R. Kent, Dr. Erwin Panofsky, J. Robert Rubin and Dr. David H. Stevens.

Sack Amusements has acquired national rights to Tiffany's "Lena Rivers," and will reissue the Sam Bischoff production under the title of "The Sin of Lena Rivers."

NETWORK TELEVISION 5 TO 10 YEARS DISTANT, SAYS LENOX LOHR OF NBC

Leaders Deprecate Too Enthusiastic Publicity; NBC Sells Largest Amount of Time in Its History

Networking of television programs is from five to ten years in the future, members of the Federal Communications Commission, investigating charges of monopoly in broadcasting, were told this week by Lenox Lohr, president of the National Broadcasting Company. David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, which controls the National Broadcasting Company, had said only a few weeks ago that NBC's television would be ready for the New York World's Fair in April, but he was referring to New York state telecasting only.

Chain picture programs, Mr. Lohr indicated, will not be possible until some method of linking stations at a reasonable cost is developed. Other than that, he said, picture radio now is sufficiently developed to be offered the public.

A little matter of $100,000,000 stands between the public and chain television, that being the price, the NBC estimated, that any organization undertaking the task would have to pay for a wire line across the country adequate to carry all the frequencies necessary for television broadcasting.

Cites Picture Broadcasting Cost

Even individual picture broadcasting will prove expensive, particularly if a great deal of live talent is used, Mr. Lohr told the commission. NBC is preparing to go on the air in the spring with two to three hours of television programs a week for the New York area, and even the modest schedule which the company has worked out will require the full time service of 40 persons, with a total cost of operation figured at $1,000,000 a year per hour of daily broadcasting.

In other words, under present conditions, a station giving service 18 hours a day, as many broadcasting stations do, would be faced with an annual expenditure of $18,000,000, were it possible to obtain sufficient program material for 18 hours a day of operation.

Television today has been perfected to the point where it is "definitely good enough" to be offered the public, Mr. Lohr declared, asserting it to be comparable to the home motion picture. However, he added, there will be important improvements.

Long Rehearsal Periods

Broadcasting generally will be greatly affected by television and its technique will be changed, particularly for transmission of both sight and sound. One of the changes which will have to come is that of abandoning the present broadcasting practice of reading from scripts, which will necessitate long rehearsal periods for actors.

The last of a score of witnesses presented by National Broadcasting Company, lead-off figure in the commission's investigation, Mr. Lohr's testimony completed the study of NBC and paved the way for interrogation of officers of the Columbia Broadcasting System this week.

Meanwhile, at the White House, President Roosevelt denied rumors that a change was pending in the leadership of the communications commission and said that Chairman Frank R. McNinch, appointed a year ago to "clean up" the commission, would be continued in his present position.

TWO TELEVISION STATIONS FOR G.E.

"Television now seems capable of providing an acceptable level of visual entertainment to supplement the highly developed practice of sound broadcasting," according to a statement from General Electric this week in which the company disclosed that television studios are being equipped at Schenectady, N. Y., for the televising of staged shows and motion pictures, and in the Helderberg hills, south of Schenectady and giving coverage of that city, Albany and Troy. Two types of receivers—a table model and a console one—were developed for use in television field tests. Both have push-button controls and include sound accompaniment. In connection with the General Electric exhibit at the World's Fair, New York, such equipment will be shown in operation, it was said.

New Year Statements By Radio Executives

The ending of the past year brought a variety of statements from executives of manufacturing companies and broadcasting systems, some deprecating too enthusiastic publicity given television; others predicting great developments.

David Sarnoff

David Sarnoff, president of RCA, reiterated his declaration of television's proximity; said NBC would telecast daily, coincident with the April opening of the New York World's Fair and that RCA would place sets on the market at that time; declared that business picked up the last six months of 1938, and that NBC had sold the largest amount of network time in its history.

Mr. Sarnoff delivered his views more generally in an address before the American Association for the Advancement of Science, in Richmond, Va., on December 28th.

Lenox R. Lohr

Lenox R. Lohr, president of NBC, revealed in further detail the company's record in an interview in the Wall Street Journal.

The gross income for 1938 was $38,432,171, an increase of 6 1-10 per cent over 1937, while operating costs rose.

Television will not compete with the motion pictures, Major Lohr wrote in an article entitled "Television Is Here!", in the January 14 issue of Liberty magazine.

"Television will have its greatest value in offering entertainment of a type and tempo which is not competitive with the theatre or the movies," Major Lohr said.

Radio Corporation

RCA's net income for 1938, calculated by The Wall Street Journal, will be about $6,700,000, "equal to about 25 cents a share on 13,881,016 shares of common stock," compared with a "net income of $9,024,858, or 42 cents a common share, reported in 1937."

RCA Victor Company, record manufacturing and selling subsidiary, is reported to have done 20 per cent better than in 1937.

George K. Throckmorton, president of the RCA Manufacturing Company, noted that the public trend was to the use of recorded music and of small, low-priced receiving sets.

J. Kenneth Whittaker, chief instructor at RCA Institute, addressing the American Institute of Science and Engineering Clubs, in New York City, declared that television was "technically superior" to radio in its earliest stages.

Mr. Whittaker pointed out the apathy of the English public to television.

Columbia Broadcasting

William S. Paley, president of the Columbia Broadcasting System, praised the coverage of the European crises by American networks.

Philco

Larry E. Gubb, president of the Philco Radio and Television Corporation, declared that television will be for many years "in swaddling clothes."

Warn Against Too Much Television Publicity

Radio executives and technicians are decrying a too intensive "ballyhoo" of television, lest the public be disappointed with the results.

"It is certainly a mistake to ballyhoo television to the public beyond honest statement of facts," declared Powell Crosley, Jr., president of the Crosley Corporation, of Cincinnati.

Dr. Leon Levy, president of station WCAU, of Philadelphia, said that while television is possible, it would be unwise to "plug" it as being done now by industry leaders, because the public will expect it to be like the motion pictures. He said sales of ordinary radio sets had declined.

The public may not be interested, even after television becomes a reality, warned Carlton L. Dyer, managing director for the Philco Company of Great Britain, on a recent visit. Dyer pointed at the sale of only about 4,000 receiving sets in Great Britain, despite two years of television broadcasting.

Larry E. Gubb, president of the Philco Radio and Television Corporation, of Philadelphia, declared, "Television never will supplant radio. Television is simply another service."

"Ten Best" Films Named in Film Daily Critics' Poll

The "10 best" pictures of 1938, as selected by newspapers critics in Film Daily's poll, were: "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Walt Disney—RKO Radio; "You Can't Take It with You," Columbia; "Alexander's Ragtime Band," Twentieth Century-Fox; "Boys Town," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; "Marie Antoinette," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; "In Old Chicago," Twentieth Century-Fox; "The Adventures of Robin Hood," Warner Brothers; "The Citaldel," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (England); "Love Finds Andy Hardy," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and "The Hurricane," United Artists (Goldwyn).

LITHO U

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Auspicious Start

Making predictions good, Hollywood began 1939 with quite a production putsch. Twelve pictures were started. Of this group four or five give promise of becoming subjects of much interest to exhibitor and patron alike. In the completed ten there are also three or four productions which are expected to attract more than usual attention.

Always at this season of the year Hollywood's production forces are full of good resolutions. The mistakes of other years won't be repeated. The present year's output of pictures will be bigger, better and more profitable for all concerned. There will be more new kinds of pictures. The number of "Class B's" will be reduced. New faces and new ideas will tumble over one another. No one's memory is long enough or strong enough to recall when such statements were not made. Each old year proves its own pudding and so will 1939, no matter what is said in January. One fact is predominant, however. Outdoor adventure pictures, big and little, will feature the release schedules of the immediate future.

Republic Starts Pair

Republic started two films. "Wagons Westward," the costliest production the company ever has attempted, will feature Richard Dix, Gail Patrick and Edward Ellis. In the tentatively titled "Higgins Family Number Two," James Lucille and Russell Gleason are the principals and will be supported by Harry Davenport, Mary Hart, Tommy Ryan, Marjorie Gateson and Maude Eburne.

Warners held a similar pace. In "On Trail," melodrama and romance against a courtroom bockground, will be seen John Litel, Margaret Lindsay, Nedda Harrigan, Edward Norris, James Stevenson and Janet Chapman. "Hero for a Day," a topical romance melodrama, will present Jane Bryan, Henry O'Neill, Elisabeth Risdon, Dickie Jones and Charley Grapewin.

Monogram also started two pictures. "Sky Pirate," first of a series to be based on the "Tailspin Tommy" cartoon, will star John Trent with Milburn Stone, Marjorie Reynolds, Lucien Littlefield and Jason Robards. Warren Hull, Marsha Hunt, Clay Clement, Morgan Wallace and Virginia Howell are listed as the principals in "Star Reporter."

MGM and Hal Roach

At MGM work began on "Sergeant Madden," in which Wallace Beery, Laraine Johnson, Alan Curtis, John Brown and Marian Martin are the important players. Hal Roach began work on "Captain Fury." The cast includes Brian Aherne, John Carradine, Victor McLaglen, June Lang, Virginia Field, William Hall, Lunsden Hare, Paul Lukas, George Zucco and John Warburton.

GOVERNOR SALUTES HOLLYWOOD CHARITY

Governor Culbert L. Olson has paid tribute to Frank Capra, president of the Screen Directors Guild; Charles Brackett, head of the Screen Writers Guild, and Jean Hersholt, president, Motion Picture Relief Fund, for the industry's plans to build a home for Hollywood's needy aged men and women by means of a weekly radio program.

"As head of the California family," said Governor Olson, "I wish heartily to salute and congratulate you and all participating members of the motion picture guilds who have banded together in a worthy cause. The guilds' plans to establish a great home for the needy of the film industry by means of a radio show, made possible by the voluntary talent contributions of their members, is a constructive step.

"For all of you to stop in the midst of your activities to work for others, to volunteer your talent unselfishly, is indeed commendable, and I again salute all of you for your noble spirit and purpose."

With other elements of the industry planning a Boys Town for Southern California's unfortunate children and the many unpublicized charities of numerous artists helping hundreds of others, Hollywood's humanity to man, as it will be demonstrated in the Screen Guilds' shows in CBS coast-to-coast broadcast, is expected to net the Relief Fund $10,000 weekly.

Columbia's entry in the new list is "Old Mrs. Leonard and Her Machine Guns." Fay Bainter, Ida Lupino, Lee Bowman, Henry Armetta, Tom Duggan, Warren Hymer, Harold Huber and Joseph Sawyer will be the centers of interest.

Paramount also chose a melodrama, "Federal Offense," as its picture to launch the new year. In the cast are Lloyd Nolan, J. Carrol Naish, Shirley Logan, Heather Angel, Broderick Crauford, John Eldredge, Richard Carle, Raymond Hatton, Phillip Warren and George Meeker.

At 20th Century-Fox, "Alexander Graham Bell" went into work. A romantic biography of the scientist, it will present Don Ameche, Loretta Young, Henry Fonda, Spring Byington, Polly Ann Young, Sally Blane, Georgiana Young, Charles Coburn and Ralph Remley.

RKO-Radio began work on "Picardy Max," a comedy romance in which James Ellison, Helen Wood, Robert Kent, John Wray and Selmer Jackson will be featured.

Wide Span of Themes

The entertainment scope of the ten completed pictures is wide. A terror picture, a spectacle, a couple of melodramas and comedies, a tear jerker and an outdoor action adventure story are included.

Universal's "Son of Frankenstein" will call upon Basil Rathbone, Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi, Josephine Hutchinson, Lionel Atwill and Donnie Dunagan to provide the chills, thrills and screams. "Stage Coach," Walter Wanger, a sort of "Grand Hotel" on wheels story, will present Claire Trevor, John Wayne, Andy Devine, John Carradine, Tom Mitchell, Louise Platt, George Bancroft, Tim Holt, Berton Churchill, Donald Meek, Chris Martin, Elvira Rios, Cornelius Keefe, Florence Lake, Frances Ford, Walter McGrail and Yakima Canutt. Universal also finished "Code of the Streets," a "Little Tough Guys" picture in which will be seen Harry Carey, Leon Ames, Frankie Thomas, James McCallion, Paul Fix and Marc Lawrence.

Two pictures came off the line at MGM. The spectacular "Ice Follies of 1939" will feature Joan Crawford, James Stewart, Lew Ayers, Lionel Stander, Charles D. Brown, Bess Earhardt, the entire company of the skating extravaganza "Ice Follies" including Ted and Roy Shipstad, Heinie Brock, Harrison Legg, and a chorus of 24 girl skaters. Principals in the second feature, "Four Girls in White," are Florence Rice, Ann Rutherford, Una Merkel, Mary Howard, Alan Marshall, Buddy Ebsen, Kent Taylor and Jessie Ralph.

Warners Finish Two

Warners completed two pictures. The melodrama "Smashing the Money Ring" will offer Ronald Reagan, Rosella Towne, John Gallaudet, John Litel, Eddie Foy, Jr., Steffi Duna, Paul Panzer, John Gittelson, Dick Botilier and Edgar Edwards for name value. "Torchy Blane for Mayor," a topical comedy with a bit of mystery juggled in, will present Glenda Farrell, Barton MacLane, Tom Kennedy, Joe Cunningham, Frank Shannon, Irving Bacon, Larry Williams and John Miljan.

"Sweepstakes Millionaire," domestic comedy, was finished at Paramount. Charlie Ruggles and Marjorie Rambeau are starred, with Charley Grapewin, William Frawley, Broderick Crowford, Billy Lee, Evelyn Keyes, Phillip Warren, John Gallaudet, Mary Parker and Richard Denning.

Columbia's "Mounted Police" (tentative title) will present Charles Starrett, Linda Winters, Bob Nolan, Robert Fiske and Vernon Steele.

AUSTRALIA "OFF" GANG FILMS, SAYS MICHALOVE

Dislikes "Smart Aleck" and "Coed" Pictures, Declares Kent's Assistant; Business Up

Australia's screen public has screen tastes "pretty much like" America's, but definitely dislikes "gangster," "smart aleck" and "coed" pictures, according to Dan Michalove, assistant to Sidney R. Kent, president of Twentieth Century. Mr. Michalove is home from a three-months' tour of the Hoyt theatre circuit properties, in which National Theatres possesses a prominent interest.

Culture and Temperament

"It's a matter of culture and temperament," Mr. Michalove said. "The Australians don't like sordidness and the type of violence portrayed in the average American gangster film. And they certainly don't like the aggressive, smart, sophisticated characters which appear in some of our films. I can cite Cagney. This is not saying anything against a competitor's product, nor reflecting on Cagney. It is just citing a type they don't like. And as for football and "co-ed" pictures, well, they don't like them because they don't understand them.

"Outside of these exceptions, American films are favored by Australians; certainly over British, and Australian product.

Business has been good the past year, and is expected to continue so, Mr. Michalove said. "As to predicting prosperity there at any time," he said, "all you have to do is to look at the financial section of a newspaper and see the price of Australian wool."

Sees Boomerang in Film Control

Mr. Michalove, while reluctant to be quoted on Australian film legislation, said that the establishment of a License Commission in New South Wales with wide powers, including the ability to license all theatres, "might prove to be a boomerang" for the theatre owners.

Mr. Michalove said that licenses would be issued to the theatres themselves, not to the operators, so that when the theatre's license expires, the operator cannot go and build another theatre. If his lease with the owner of the theatre expires, he is subject to the same limitation.

The Hoyt circuit built three theatres last year: the Albert Park and the Preston in Melbourne, both of about 1,400 seats; and the Bondi, in a Sidney suburb. Mr. Michalove added there were no building plans for next year, as far as he knew, but that there would be considerable renovation. There had been no changes of a major nature in circuit personnel while Mr. Michalove was conducting his survey, and none was contemplated, he said.

Mr. Michalove was accompanied by his family, and by Irving Barry, assistant to Spyros Skouras, head of National Theatres.

Hoyts Directors Oppose Quota

The directors of the Hoyts Theatres circuit recently went on record in opposition to the establishment of an "Empire Quota," favoring English product in the Australian market. Their printed "memorandum" declared they viewed the idea with "grave concern."

"As we understand it," the statement read, "an Empire Quota is put forward as a measure to ensure adequate presentation of English films throughout Australia and to secure reciprocal treatment for Australian made films on the English market.

"This company desires to go on record in stating that worthwhile English films have always received preferential treatment at the hands of Australian exhibitors. Indeed, exhibitors have done more to foster British films in this country than have the British Film companies themselves."

The statement continued that, with a few notable exceptions, "the bulk of English films brought into Australia are of a markedly inferior quality. If, therefore, exhibitors are compelled by legislation to screen quantities of these without any safeguard as to continuity of quality supplies, the result must be financial loss and the jeopardizing of Australian shareholders' investments."

The compulsion embodied in the New South Wales quota law that the exhibitor play 15 per cent British product, is understood to stand suspended until the Australians obtain from Britain reciprocal concessions. Other features of the new act, which is expected to be copied by other Australian states, are a three per cent quota on American films (the old laws provided for the production by American companies in that country but proved ineffective); establishment of a license commission to rule on theatre building applications; and an increase of exhibitors' cancellation privileges from 12½ per cent to 25 per cent.

Australia Producers Like Quota, Says Gordon Ellis

Gordon Ellis, representing the Norman Bede Rydge interests in Sydney, which comprise the British Empire Films, Greater Union Theatres and Cinesound studio, is in America seeking an outlet for Australian product.

Mr. Ellis declared that Australian film producers were enthusiastic over the imposition of the 3 per cent quota. He added England always has returned some revenue for Australian product, but not the United States.

Mr. Ellis said that the Australian producers have entered into a pooling agreement, convinced that the New South Wales Act means increased business at home and improved markets elsewhere. Cinesound and National Studios are the major factors in the pooling agreement. Twelve pictures probably will be produced by them this year, he said.

Mr. Ellis is to visit Hollywood soon, to investigate talent and technical and writing possibilities.

Wants Deanna Name Legalized

Deanna Durbin has filed a petition in Hollywood's superior court asking that her screen name be legalized. The petition said that her real name was Edna Mae Durbin, but sought court approval to change it in order to protect her screen name from infringement and improper exploitation.

Four Negro Films

George Randol has organized a new production company, with plans to make a minimum of four all colored cast pictures annually, first of which is planned for production in about 60 days. Called George Randol Productions, the company has a capital stock of $50,000, and intends establishing permanent production headquarters in Hollywood.

Paramount Will Retire Debentures With 5 Millions

The board of directors of Paramount Pictures at a special meeting Tuesday in New York, voted to call at par, plus accrued interest, $5,000,000 of the company's six per cent debentures, the call to be made at once out of the company's excess cash balances, augmented by a small six year bank loan.

"It is expected that the company's consolidated cash position, after the call and payment of the $5,000,000 bonds will be in excess of $10,000,000," said the announcement. "Interest saving accruing to the company, as a result of the retirement of these bonds, will amount to approximately $250,000 per annum," it was said.

Following the call, there will remain outstanding in the hands of the public about $4,400,000 of the original debenture issue of approximately $26,000,000—the balance having been purchased in the open market by the corporation or exchanged for its three and one-quarter per cent debentures.

The company's 1938 consolidated earnings will exceed $4,000,000 and may reach $4,500,000, the Wall Street Journal estimated Wednesday.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

Jesse James

(Twentieth Century-Fox)

Biography of an Outlaw

Showmen can take the advance advertising and the press books for "Jesse James" at face value and still fall short of doing the picture justice. It is like Director Henry King's "Lloyds of London," "In Old Chicago" and "Alexander's Ragtime Band" in size, sweep and power, yet like none of these nor any other great film in subject, design and treatment.

It contains just about everything melodramatic the cinematograph has discovered since "The Great Train Robbery," including a train robbery thrillingly reminiscent of that one, and it entertains during every one of its 105 minutes.

To a generation taught to believe that Al Capone and Dutch Schultz typify the outlaw, the name of Jesse James may be as that of a legendary figure and his story a fuzzy memory. He emerges here as a real and wholly plausible person moving ignobly but logically and directly in the direction whither circumstance and impulse send him. He is neither glamorized nor brutalized, defended nor damned. But the account of his life is a more convincing demonstration of the crime-does-not-pay principle than all the fictional films ever produced.

The time and place of the James boys' activities are re-created with impressive realism. Here, as in "Kentucky," the Zanuck talent seems to have made of process color a willing servant in the service of narration. Although some of the finest color shots yet recorded are seen in the picture, there are long stretches when mere pigmentation is completely forgotten. For that matter, there are periods during which it is difficult to remember that what's going on is a motion picture instead of time and the doings of men.

The name character is played in a sane, balanced and admirably conditioned manner by Tyrone Power, whose rise to ranking among the Money Making Stars of 1938 will not be forgotten by showmen exploiting the film. He neither swaggers nor slinks his villainy, but sets it up for what it was and takes the wages of sin simply. Henry Fonda is as good or better as Frank James, with less footage, and Randolph Scott measures up to both as the lawman torn between sympathy and duty. John Carradine's Bob Ford is a shrewd study in venality, and Donald Meek's railroad president touches a new high in hissable chicanery.

Showmen may as well take this occasion, also, to introduce the name of Nancy Kelly into their marquee vocabulary. Her portrayal of Jesse's sweetheart and wife is a vital and satisfying performance. Jane Darwell and Claire Du Brey competently play the other two feminine roles, both brief.

The screen play is by Nunnally Johnson, who is also down as associate producer, although the usually self-effacing Zanuck allows his name to be banner-lined across the main title of this production. Mr. Johnson's material is said to have been dug up by Rosalind Shaffer and Jo Frances James in a period of three years, under research direction of Frances Richardson. It is quite evident that he had a wealth of it to work with, for he has filled the chinks in the old hearsay story of the James brothers snugly with background and parallel incident. Three of his major episodes are masterly, the introduction in which Jesse kills a land grabber, Frank's rescue of Jesse from a jail surrounded by cavalrymen, and the disastrous final bank raid at Northfield, Minnesota. A first rate picture could have been built on any one of these. They are but incidents in this one.

The moral equation, important these days to showmen and public, is solved with complete candor. Both cause and result of the James decade of outlawry are shown impartially. The picture is therefore suitable for exhibition to Americans of all ages, times and places. It may well turn out to be an American classic. Certainly it is a Zanuck triumph.

The Great Man Votes

(RKO-Radio)

Political Comedy Drama

Showman can tell their customers that the good news they've been reading about this picture in the syndicated columns is gross understatement. Showmen who take their customers into their confidence on occasion can go a step farther and guarantee it. No American will dispute the first assertion and no present or future voter will accept a refund. This is, on many a count, just about the most natural audience natural the studios have turned out since the gross average started slipping.

This is not a million dollar picture. It is not chock full of marquee personalities. It is not, although its renown may spread and make it so, a picture likely to shatter opening-night records. But it is a picture more likely than not to hang up a cross-continent record for building up grosses from day to day and holding over on popular demand. It is as suitable for the greatest city as the smallest town, and its natural audience is composed of all those Americans who vote or ever intend to. That group numbers, roughly, a million potential and quite probable ticket buyers.

Nobody has been shouting that this picture is propaganda for Americanism, and it isn't. It is a story about politics and politicians, mainly an amusing story, never a preachment. But it does as nice a job of reminding people what the ballot box is for and about as ever has been done by screen, radio or otherwise, smiling the while and never for a second putting aside the principal job of entertaining. (It is quite possible that not even the men behind the picture ever gave this aspect of the thing a thought.)

John Barrymore plays the great man who votes, and those showmen mentioned in the foregoing who take their customers into their confidence can tell them that this quite incredible performer has here the richest role he's had since he taught Broadway audiences "Hamlet," not excepting his silk-hatted politician in "Hold That Co-Ed" or any of the other highlights in his latest and greatest career. The great man of the title is a former scholar who has turned from book to bottle. He works, slightly, as a night watchman, and his children, who know him for what he is and isn't, are his only admirers as the picture opens. Then it is discovered that he is the sole voter in a key precinct and the politicians arrive bearing inducements. What he does about this situation, and about the relatives who want to take the children away from him, and a great many other things, make up the story, a story told with consummate artistry on the screen and not to be told here or elsewhere, in any tepid synopsis.

Mr. Barrymore's supporting cast is more competent than commercial. Virginia Weidler, as the daughter, confirms the suspicion found in "Out West with the Hardys" that she is a great child actress. Peter Holden, as the son, is almost as impressive. Katharine Alexander, Clarence Kolb and Donald MacBride stand out among the adult players, although the star is first, last and always the commanding personality.

Mr. Barrymore's off-screen support distinguished itself in every particular. Cliff Reid, producer, doubtlessly rates first and top credit for putting together a production as realistic as a newsreel, as plain as a well edited newspaper and as powerful as the camera can be at its best. Garson Kanin's direction has about it the supreme artistry of seeming artlessness, his players appearing to meander rather than go and come, his incidents to happen rather than to be made to. Much of this would be due, naturally, to the commonsense screen play written by John Twist from the sensibly conceived story by Gordon Malherbe Hillman. And there is debt, too, to camera man Russell Metty, whose lens saw and reported a plain, powerful picture and forebore to glamorize it.

The time of the picture is 1923, but could be now, and the place is an American city, not necessarily a metropolis. The subject is politics but the picture is not political. It deals with "the party" but doesn't say which one. The film is a natural for any and every motion picture screen in the United States and its possessions.

Arizona Legion

Western

Showmen who specialize in westerns, particularly those featuring George O'Brien, and others who like diversity in their programs, can start right now recommending "Arizona Legion." It has everything that a soundly constructed outdoor action picture is supposed to have—romance, melodrama, comedy, musical and tall story telling interludes, and thrills. The hair-raising action involves bands of outlaws, the Arizona Rangers and troops of U. S. Cavalry in half a dozen spectacular chases. It's the kind that starts the kids whooping, causes the pulses of adults to beat a little faster. The natural outdoor settings are objects of pictorial beauty. The caliber of acting throughout is high-grade.

"Boone Yeager" dishonors himself in the eyes of those who are most considerate of his welfare. They do not know (nor does the audience for a time) that he has been commissioned secretly to organize a ranger posse and wipe out the lawless element in Pinyon. "Boone" associates himself with the road agents, learns all their secrets except the identity of their guiding genius. Alienating himself from his sweetheart, "Letty," sacrificing the friendship of "Lieutenant Ives," he participates in a hold up, is captured by the troopers and sent to jail There he learns the secret of the man higher up. Breaking jail, freeing his pal, 'Whopper," whom he sends to summon the Rangers, he captures the bandits, "Teagle," "Dutton" and "Kirby." The Rangers arrive for the shooting climax.

Probably the best picture George O'Brien ever made, exhibitors have a high ranking office name to exploit. In Chill Wills they have opportunity to call attention to a uniquely interesting character. The love interest part of the story is of more significance than in most westerns.

In the next few months Hollywood will supply theatres with many stirring outdoor pictures—"Stand Up and Fight," "Song of the West," "Union Pacific," "Wagons Westward," "Gunga Din," "Jesse James," "Oklahoma Kid" and "Dodge City," to name a few. Four or five or more pictures like "Arizona Legion" could be made for the cost of any of those mentioned, yet their substance will be that which is the substance of the O'Brien production.

Federal Man-Hunt

(Republic)

Melodrama

This is a fast-paced melodrama that breaks away from the usual gangster vs. district attorney theme. Gangsters play only a small part; most of the plot concerns the adventures of a group of persons traveling cross country in an automobile. Among them are an escaped convict, a private detective and the convict's girl friend. The law finally catches up with them at the destination.

Romance and comedy are important adjuncts. Robert Livingston, formerly one-third of the "Three Mesquiteers," is the star as the private detective. The very presentable June Travis is the girl. Others include John Gallaudet, Ben Welden, Horace MacMahon, Charles Halton and Gene Morgan.

"Pete Rennick," serving a 20-year term for robbery, contrives a jailbreak with the help of "Anne," who believes he is innocent. "Pete" has "Anne" pick up a package, which she thinks contains evidence of "Pete's" innocence, but which actually is the stolen money. "Anne" meets "Bill," who helps her to escape. "Bill" and "Anne" book passage to San Diego in an automobile. "Bill," a secret detective, is seeking evidence of the illegally run passenger service for the Bus Owners Association.

In a secluded spot the car picks up "Pete.." At a lunch wagon stop "Pete" opens the package. The money spills out. "Anne" realizes that "Pete" is a thief. "Bill" phones his partner, "Hawlings," to have the police intercept the car, but it reaches a hideout. Following a series of melodramatic incidents, "Pete" and "Lauber," with "Anne" and "Bill" held as hostages, set out for an airport. "Bill" stops the criminals when he drives the car into the get-away airplane.

King of the Underworld

(Warner Brothers)

Mobster vs. Medico

When two warring ideologies meet in the same screen script, the action is bound to be vibrant. In this thriller plot there are paired against each other a ruthless gangster and a woman physician who believes in preserving principles.

Humphrey Bogart as a "gorilla" chief adds another portrait to his gangster gallery, but in lighter tints than customarily. Kay Francis is the plot's protagonist as well as the gang chief's nemesis. A new romantic lead is provided in the English-accented James Stephenson, who should have considerable feminine drawing power. John Eldredge, Jessie Busley, Charley Foy and Murray Alper are outstanding members of the supporting cast. The screen play by George Bricker and Vincent Sherman was adapted from a story by W. R. Burnett, who wrote "Little Caesar." Lewis Seiler's direction has paced the story in a rapid, mounting stride to a finish that reaches a high in ingenious and suspenseful action.

"Joe Gurney" is an underworld lord of Napoleonic complex; "Carol Nelson" is his medico Wellington. "Carol's" first husband falls for the "easy money" of becoming the gang's physician. The police kill him in a raid and his medical spouse, although innocent, is suspected. "Carol" traces the gangsters to a small town hideout. When "Gurney" is wounded "Carol" is enlisted as the gang leader's "sawbones." With the assistance of "Bill Forrest," a hitch hiking writer, who against his will has been given the task of ghost writing "Gurney's" biography. "Dr. Nelson" uses an eye drop solution that temporarily blinds the gangsters. The police arrive; "Gurney" is killed, and the doctor and her new boy friend are rescued.

Burn 'Em Up O'Connor

(MGM)

Auto Racing Thriller

Discount the first reel, which is mostly smart aleck stuff and a little kindergarten comedy, and thereafter "Burn 'Em Up O'Connor" becomes a unique and exciting mystery melodrama, leavened by romance, told against a thrill-packed background of auto racing.

Remember "70,000 Witnesses" of a few years ago and you have a general idea of how this production goes.

Three of "Delano's" racing drivers are killed in the Indianapolis Memorial Day, Roosevelt Road and Vanderbilt Cup events, and the fourth, "Jerry (Burn 'Em Up) O'Connor," seems destined for the same fate in the San Francisco Grand Prix. But the picture's comedy relief character, a dumb mechanic, solves the riddle which blinded the drivers and caused their death. Saving "Jerry" from being a victim and pinning guilt on "Delano's" avenging old friend, "Doc Heath," "Jerry" finds romance with "Jane," and with "Delano" plans new speed triumphs.

The story and production effects are the exploitable elements in "Burn 'Em Up O'Connor." There's a plethora of thrills for the action addicts, a liberal quantity of romance for women and dabs of comedy to please both. Names aren't of any great importance, although Dennis O'Keefe, who has come along pretty consistently the past year, and Cecilia Parker, the "Judge Hardy" daughter, are featured. Such experienced players as Harry Carey, Nat Pendleton, Addison Richards and Charley Grapewin have important parts, but novitiates Tom Neal and Tom Collins are merely sent through the training school paces.

For a Saturday afternoon attraction for juvenile audiences and on nights when excitement is called for on the program, "Burn 'Em Up O'Connor" should prove a suitable booking.

Previewed in the Uptown Theatre, Hollywood. A few walked out during the first reel and there was a little tendency on the part of a few who remained to tell the players what to do, but generally the Friday night audience seemed to think the show pretty fair average entertainment in which the element of mystery was more expertly cloaked than usually. Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by Edward Sedgwick. Screen play by Milton Merlin and Byron Morgan. From the book "Salute to the Gods" by Sir Malcolm Campbell. Ben Lewis, film editor. Photographed by Lester White. P. C. A. certificate number 4920. Running time, 65 minutes when seen in Hollywood. Release date: January 13, 1939. General audience classification.

Chasing Danger

(20th Century-Fox)

Melodrama

There isn't much that can be done about "Chasing Danger." Below standard as an item of entertainment, the picture provides little, other than a name or two, that might constitute the basis of a legitimate exploitation campaign.

The story is melodramatic, with the elements of romance, comedy, action, excitement and adventure. The background is unique. But for some unaccountable reason, remembering that the picture is a major company product, the elements are not combined to make the whole effective.

The picture is promising at the outset. Two American newsreel camera men are assigned to cover an Arab revolt in the desert. But once the pair, "Mitchell" and his comedy assistant, become involved with exotic and mysterious "Renee," everything that happens thereafter is either known by any intelligent audience or can easily be anticipated.

"Mitchell", in addition to covering the pictorial news, sets out to discover who is fostering and financing the revolt. That brings in a character, "Duvac," similar to the match king who disappeared from a plane a few years ago. After everyone watching the picture learns that "Duvac" is the man behind the goings on and that "Renee" is his undercover agent, "Mitchell" finds it out.

Previewed in the Uptown Theatre, Los Angeles. Patrons of this house, long accustomed to looking at previews, good and otherwise, were not slow to demonstrate their opinion that "Chasing Danger" was in the second classification. However, for a Saturday afternoon attraction to audiences composed mainly of youngsters, the show might prove of some worth.—G.M.

The Mysterious Miss X

(Republic)

Mystery Melodrama

Michael Whalen and Chick Chandler move over from Twentieth Century-Fox to Republic to be teamed in "The Mysterious Miss X," formula type mystery melodrama flecked with comedy.

The story concerns their adventures when as stranded actors they are mistaken by American police for Scotland Yard officers during depredations of an unknown killer. Supporting them are Mary Hart, Mabel Todd, Frank M. Thomas, Regis Toomey, Don Douglas, Wade Boteler, Dorothy Tree, Eddie Acuff, Pierre Watkin and Harlan Briggs.

Gus Meins directed from a screenplay by Olive Cooper, based on the original story idea by George W. Yates. Herman Schlom was associate producer.

Highspots of the picture are the situations created by Miss Todd and Chandler, who had an enthusiastic response from the audience for his antics. Throngs in the Neighborhood Theatre welcomed the fare.

"Keith Neville" is mistaken for an inspector of Scotland Yard and "Casey" for his assistant, during a murder investigation in a small town. They let the mistake ride, to prevent their being made suspects in the killing, during which $50,000 disappears. "Neville" falls in love with the daughter of the chief suspect and agrees to aid in the investigation. The solution comes after an automobile chase, another murder and a knock-down-drag-out fight, while mysterious figures in black veils flit about.

Song of the Buckaroo

(Monogram)

Western

Here is a picture full of the ingredients that interest audiences that like action. Given better than average production, fast moving, counterbalancing dialogue with rapid-fire movement and making good use of vocal and instrumental musical interludes, "Song of the Buckaroo," first 1939 release for Tex Ritter, promises to do much towards increasing the player's standing in the ranks of western stars.

Novelty that gets out of the trodden formula paths highlights the story. "Texas Dan," an outlaw waging war on outlaws, is wanted in many communities. When he decides to go straight, members of his own gang doublecross him, first by robbing a bank and then holding up a stage. "Texas," wounded, is found at the scene of the stage holdup by his faithful henchman, "Cashaway." Dressed in the murder victim's clothes, "Tex" loses his old identity. In a frontier town, "Texas," whose story is known only to "Cashaway," is soon a prominent citizen, a bank official, in love with "Evelyn" and posing as the father of "Mary Ruth." He is nominated for mayor, and, following a typically conducted singing campaign, is elected. Thereupon "Max" makes his reappearance and all is set for the big thrill action scene. Forcing "Tex" to help them rob his own bank, he turns the tables on them and following a wild fight in which "Cashaway" sacrifices his life, the bandits are slain.

The climax has "Sheriff Wade" reading the obituary of bad man "Texas Dan" and the prospect of a happy domestic life for the new found character "Evelyn" and waif "Mary Ruth."

In addition to the exploitation value of the Ritter name there is the well produced and understandable outdoor adventure production. Showmen have an opportunity to create further interest by publicizing the unique piano playing talents of the child prodigy, "Mary Ruth."

For Saturday afternoon showing or any time the youngsters predominate in attendance, "Song of the Buckaroo" looks like a feature that will prove highly satisfactory.

Boy Slaves

(RKO Radio)

Child Labor Melodrama

This is a powerful presentation of the case against child labor, specifically as practised in Southern turpentine camps under the system of economic enslavement lately legislated against with less than wholesale success. The conditions depicted have been described eloquently in the lay press and by magazine feature writers, a circumstance favorable to the box office prospects of a film light in marquee personalities, but the description here achieved by a well-pointed camera is more eloquent and likely to be more effective in arousing public interest than any written account has been or can be.

Produced and directed in somberly realistic style by P. J. Wolfson, the screen play by Albert Bein and Ben Orkow tells a straight story about a group of boys who progress from a state of nomadic vagabondage into the brutal service of a turpentine camp where a technically legal type of peonage goads them to resistance which ends tragically for one of their number and for a guard.

Up to the point of their ultimate surrender to an honest policeman, the picture is gripping and forceful. It closes in a courtroom episode which give a kindly judge an opportunity to address the audience on the evils of the system, but it has made its points before that.

Anne Shirley gets top billing and performs admirably her relatively small acting chore, but it is James McCallion as the tough leader of the youthful gang and Roger Daniel as the suspected stool pigeon who register most strongly. A number of experienced character men play the unprincipled camp bosses impressively.

Save for identification of the scene as a turpentine camp, the setting is geographically vague. The time is now. The boy gang is as tough and unrestrained as any seen in the several recent pictures featuring hardboiled kids, but there is no possibility of man, woman or child mistaking the moral implications of their experiences.

Heart of Paris

(Tri-National)

Problem Theme

A carefully wrought characterization by Raimu is the outstanding feature of this French adult importation which Tri-National Films is releasing in this country. Raimu portrays a well-meaning but befuddled person who befriends a heretofore friendless girl and in so doing involves himself and his family in endless trouble which eventually causes him to turn on the girl he befriended. The rising French actress Michele Morgan plays the girl.

The picture's title in France was "Gribouille," which refers to a kind and valiant dreamer. The title "Heart of Paris" probably has more exploitation value for this country.

There are sufficient, and intelligently written, English titles to compensate for a lack of knowledge of the French tongue. The film's appeal lies chiefly in selected audiences appreciative of an adult problem theme.

"Morestan" is the good natured proprietor of a Paris sporting goods shop and the father of two grown children, a boy and girl. Called for jury duty he helps free "Natalie," a young woman accused of having killed her "lover." Unable to obtain employment, "Natalie" asks aid of "Morestan," who gives her a job in his shop. He tells his family that "Natalie" is the daughter of an old friend.

The son, who attended the trial, believes his father is carrying on an illicit relationship, but learns he has falsely accused his parent. The son is attracted to the girl. The fiance of "Morestan's" daughter also discovers "Natalie's" identity and insults her, which causes a fist fight with the son. When the son steals from his father, the latter blames the dereliction on "Natalie" and strikes her on the head with a statuette.

"Morestan," dazed, tries to tell a gendarme that he has committed a tragedy but his wife tells him that "Natalie" is unhurt.

Disbarred

(Paramount)

Melodrama

Primary name value in "Disbarred" is represented by Gail Patrick, Otto Kruger, Robert Preston and Sidney Toler. The supporting cast members are of little exploitation consequence.

One of the Paramount studio's "General Manager's Office" group of production, the picture is melodramatic in character and topical in content. There is only the barest suggestion of love interest and meager comedy is of the sinister variety.

"Disbarred" exposes the shady practices of unethical criminal lawyers. Tossed out of the legal profession for his part in defending underworld characters, "Cradon" moves to another city and discovers the brilliant woman lawyer, "Joan Carroll." Rounding up his old cohorts, but keeping his identity secret, "Cradon" makes "Joan" his mouthpiece in defending the community's criminals. "Joan's" loyalty to her oath more than balances her thanks to "Cradon" for giving her an opportunity. At the climax she switches over to the district attorney's side and prepares to prosecute her mentor on a murder charge.

There is a ring of familiarity to almost every episode pictured in "Disbarred." Consequently, there is no novelty with which to pique patron interest.

Lincoln in the White House

(Vitaphone)

A Must for American Screens

One of the biggest stage hits in New York is Robert E. Sherwood's "Abe Lincoln in Illinois." In this inspiring screen miniature, Lincoln continues from where the Sherwood play left him, on his departure from Springfield for Washington. In a collection of concise and significant sequences, the President is seen and heard from the occasion of his inaugural address on March 4, 1861, to "The Gettysburg Address." Rich incidents detail the humanity, humor, simplicity and sincerity of the Lincoln character, whether in a political conference with the cabinet or in domestic conversation with Mary and Tad. The President is shown in his idealistic determination to issue the Emancipation Proclamation, his interview with a mother, come to plead for her son, who is to face the firing squad for falling asleep on sentry duty, the perfect Lincoln reply to General Grant's critics and the penciling of the draft of the Gettysburg speech on rough wrapping paper. Frank McGlynn, Sr., whose portrayal of the President has become almost second nature to him, plays his part with sympathetic and effective feeling. Dickie Moore, John Harron, Raymond Brown, Erville Alderson and Sibyl Harris competently re-create the other historical characters. William McGann has directed sensitively from a moving screen play transcription by Charles L. Tedford. There are handsome mountings and warm color shadings. The outstanding subject should receive enthusiastic endorsement from theatre audiences in general and from patriotic, educational and religious organizations in particular.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Penny's Picnic

(MGM)

Appetite Builder

Again that feminine wizard of pots and pans, Prudence Penny, cooks up dishes tasty enough to set before a king, or any appreciative movie goer. Prudence goes out to the great outdoors to do her home making tricks. With a set of ordinary cooking utensils and a wood fire, she serves up a meal that has practically everything from soup to nuts. Some glowing color helps to make the dishes more appetizing and there is the salty comment of Pete Smith to add relish. —Running time, 10 minutes.

Petra, the Lost City

(United Artists)

Historical Ghost Town

Picture goers and novel readers who have been thrilled and mystified by the stories of ghost cities will relish this anthropological expedition among the haunted ruins of Petra, lost city of Biblical times. The crumbling ruins of temples and palaces bear silent testimony to the tenacity by foreign conquerors. Today the spot is desolate and deserted and no self-respecting Arab would be found sleeping or dead near it. Through sensitive camera manipulation and expressive color daubing, the eerie atmosphere is expertly presented.—Running time, one reel.

Mutts to You

Three Stooges

That comedy trio, the Three Stooges, past masters of the art of slapstick, cavort in the manner to which they are accustomed in this two-reeler. The story, a minor item with the Stooges and serving only as background for their antics, has the boys operating a dog washing shop, involves them in a kidnapping case and has made provisions for the inevitable chase. The boys continue to pummel each other with complete abandon, never seeming to tire of their favorite indoor or outdoor sport. Included in the cast are Bess Flowers, Lane Chandler and Vernon Dent. Running time, 18 minutes.

Jerusalem

(United Artists)

Timely

In view of unsettled conditions in the Holy Land, this excursion to the sacred but sore spot of the Near East possesses timely interest. The pictorial inspection reveals a geographical summary of the troublesome district. Visited are such historic spots as the Garden of Gethsemane, the tomb of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the Wailing Wall and a temple dedicated to the worship of Allah. Running time, one reel.

RCA RECONSTRUCTS SIX REPRODUCING SYSTEMS

New Series with Technical Improvements Announced at Three-Day Sales Convention

The Photophone theatre sound reproducing division of the Radio Corporation concluded a three-day sales convention in New York on Thursday with the announcement of a new series of six reproducers built from the present series with new technical advances, including "shock-proof" drive mechanism, double-exciter lamps, a new optical system. Special attention has also been given the external appearance of soundhead housing, amplifier rack and volume control box.

Harry L. Sommerer, RCA Photophone head, told the 50 company sales executives and salesmen attending the convention that greater convenience of operation in the projection booth is created by the new reproducers, and that they are available for all size theatres.

The convention opened Tuesday morning at the RCA manufacturing headquarters in Camden, running through Wednesday, when a banquet was held at the nearby Tavistock Country Club. On Thursday the delegates were transported to New York to visit the World's Fair grounds, NBC studios and other associated RCA company offices.

Addressing the delegates were: Henry C. Bonfig, commercial vice-president of RCA Manufacturing Company; Homer B. Snook, reproducer sales manager; Edward C. Cahill, service manager; Edward Auger, reproducer sales executive; E. T. Jones, Photophone advertising manager; Fred Wilson, manager of field sales activities for RCA Manufacturing; Max Batsel, chief Photophone engineer; Morris J. Yahr, technical chief, and Lynn Brodton, RCA equipment designer.

"Shock-proof" Drive

To augment the rotary stabilizer in effecting a constant film speed, a new drive mechanism has been designed which Mr. Batsel, who conducted a demonstration of the equipment described as "shock-proof." This was introduced, Mr. Batsel added, for the purpose of making it "impossible for gear-backlash to be transmitted to the constant-speed film sprocket, thus insuring constancy of film speed."

A double exciter lamp unit gives an emergency spare light for quick change-over in case of failure. The optical focuser on the new equipments can be locked into place after adjustment. Gear failures are said to be virtually eliminated by an integral gear box assembly built into the new sound-head which keeps gears running in an oil bath.

"Standby facilities for the equipment have been provided to relieve possible breakdowns," said Mr. Batsel.

The new type drive mechanism is mounted in a new type of integral gear box in such a way that it can be removed easily as a unit for servicing or replacement. The sound bracket assembly, including the optical system and the drum shaft, can also be removed in one piece.

Mr. Batsel explained the new self-locking focal adjustment mechanism. A light shield in front of the optical system avoids "96-cycle" hum resulting from modulation of the sprocket holes in the film. A new type of pre-focused exciter lamp bulb has been utilized, doing away with the necessity for adjusting the lamp laterally.

The sound head has a new styled housing over the electric driving motor. This cover is removable for inspection or servicing.

On the right side of the soundhead is a glass window which permits a view of the interior, so designed that it is illuminated at the edges, eliminating glare and permitting a clearer view of the interior.

The photoelectric cell transformer has been shielded in a cast iron chamber in the soundhead, insuring virtual absence of noise from static in the sound-head, according to Mr. Batsel.

A new system of mounting the soundhead beneath the projector mechanism has been devised. A separate, removable plate is provided atop the soundhead to which the mechanism is fastened. It is then only necessary to remount the removable plate on the sound-head, securing it with four screws on the outside. This contrasts with the older method of running long bolts from the projects into the soundheadhead, it was said. The removable plate also serves as an oil collection plate, gathering oil drips from the projector mechanism and feeding them into a tube which empties into a removable container.

The external styling is by John Vassos and Lynn Brodton.

Mooney Release Revives Film

Riding along with the publicity attending the release from California prison last week of the labor figure, Tom Mooney, Pathe Films is distributing, through "state rights" exchanges, the two reel film, "The Strange Case of Tom Mooney." This film was made in 1933, and released at the time through First Division Exchanges, now in liquidation.

The distribution in New York and Boston is being handled by Treo exchange, 630 Ninth Avenue, New York City, which has booked the film with the Translux Theatre in Boston and the Broadway and 49th Street Translux in New York.

Paramount Newsreel put out a "special" on the Mooney release, issued on the coast and as far west as Kansas, on the day of his release.

Movietone News released 118 feet in Monday's issue, Number 35; Pathe, 215 feet, in its Tuesday issue, Number 50; Universal, 45 feet, in its Tuesday issue, Number 735; and News of the Day, 300 feet, in its Tuesday issue, Number 233.

The Leo Morrison agency is said to be arranging a theatre tour for Mr. Mooney.

Talley Names Fitzgibbon

Truman Talley, producer of Movietone News, has appointed Steve Fitzgibbon New York studio manager. Mr. Fitzgibbon has been in English and European production, in association with producer Robert T. Kane. E. I. Sponable continues as technical director of the studio and of Movietone News.

Civic Leaders Join Hays Service Plan

How to develop the greatest usefulness of the motion picture is the challenge faced by the industry today "with part of the world on fire, with foes even in our own household, with danger of contagion from a distance," Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, told leaders of national civic, educational, religious, welfare and youth organizations Wednesday at a luncheon meeting in the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York.

At the session, a reunion of national groups that first met with Mr. Hays 17 years ago with the twofold objective of improving the quality of pictures and of audience appreciation, Dr. James E. West, Chief Scout Executive of the Boy Scouts of America, presented a resolution, adopted by the gathering, expressing appreciation to the industry for the progress it has made over the years.

"I want your best thought," Mr. Hays told the civic leaders, "on what there is we can do in thoughtfully planning ahead, to meet the new conditions with the wisdom of experience and the efficacy of honest purpose.

"We have opportunities now, we believe, for further intensifying the service of motion pictures. In doing this we shall meet the challenge of the future with a stepped-up determination to do all that we can to develop the maximum usefulness of the motion picture."

To facilitate the work, a small committee will prepare a statement of suggestions to be submitted to Mr. Hays.

IN COURTS

Tully Asks $50,000 In "Home Town" Suit

Jim Tully, author, has filed suit in the United States district court in New York against Paramount, Odessco Productions, Inc. and William K. Howard in which the author seeks damages of $50,000 and an injunction restraining the defendants from allegedly exploiting his name in connection with the motion picture, "Home Town."

The plaintiff charges violation of the Civil Rights Law of New York, claiming that Mr. Howard and Odessco have produced the film and contracted with Paramount for its distribution.

Warners Sued on Song In "Garden of the Moon"

Louis Herscher and Robert Wolf Gilbert, members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, have filed suit in federal court in Los Angeles for $60,000 damages and an accounting of profits of "Garden of the Moon," title song for the Warner Brothers picture. Named as defendants were Warner Bros., Music Publishers Holding Corporation and Al Dubin, Johnny Mercer, Harry Warren and Jean Herbert, composers and lyricists.

The plaintiffs charged that Harms, Inc., Warner subsidiary, entered into a royalty agreement with them for the song, "Garden of the Moon," musical rights first having been obtained by them from H. Bedford Jones and Barton Browne, who wrote the story. However, the complaint charged, Harms, Inc., put the Herscher-Gilbert song on the restricted list, and substituted music and lyrics written by the Warner song writers.

Injunction Denied Sunray

Application of Sunray Films, Inc., for an injunction to restrain the exhibition of the film, "The Glory of Faith" by Select Attractions, Inc., Leo Malchin, doing business as French Film Exchange, and Charles Swarzza, doing business as Island Theatre Circuit, has been denied by New York Supreme Court Justice Louis A. Valente. Sunray claimed that the picture competes unfairly with its film, "Little Flower of Jesus."

Radio-Vaudeville Suit

A suit involving a plan to obtain participation of radio advertisers in vaudeville production was revealed in New York supreme court this week when Fanchon and Marco, Inc., defendants, applied for permission to take depositions of Boris Morros and Milton Feld in Los Angeles. Sidney C. Davidson and Fred Suhr, plaintiffs, seek $75,000 damages, claiming that the defendants breached a contract whereby the plaintiffs were to negotiate with radio advertisers to participate in a vaudeville show called "Alice in Radioland," which would stage programs for radio advertisers' products.

Dismiss Short Subjects Suits

Two suits against Weinberg Enterprises, Inc., which formerly owned the Cameo, Yonkers, N. Y., and Joseph Weinberg, charging unlicensed exhibition of 20 short subjects have been dismissed by Federal Judge John C. Knox for failure to prosecute. The cases were settled out of court some time ago. Plaintiffs were Universal, Big U Film Exchange, United Artists and Walt Disney Productions. The actions asked for at least $250 damages for each alleged exhibition.

RCA Suits Charge $500,000,000 Waste

Three minor stockholders' suits have been instituted in New York supreme court against present and former officials and directors of the Radio Corporation of America charging that they "negligently and fraudulently permitted the dissipation and waste of corporate assets." In one action the loss to the corporation is estimated at about $500,000,000. In the two other suits no estimates are made.

The actions were brought by Rose Druckerman, owner of 25 shares of Radio common; Leo J. Coslow and Jacob Fox. They are suing on behalf of themselves and all other stockholders and ask that the defendants be required to repay the corporation any amounts found to have been taken from its treasury improperly.

In formal answers the individual and corporate defendants denied any wrongdoing. The present and former officials assert that they acted at all times in the best interests of RCA. They also assert that their acts were approved and ratified by the stockholders of the corporation and, in the case of the 1932 consent decree, by the federal courts.

Dismiss "Stowaway" Suit

Federal Judge John C. Knox has dismissed the song infringement suit of Charles McCord again Robbins Music Corporation, Twentieth Century-Fox, Mack Gordon and Harry Revel, on consent of the plaintiff, without costs. The suit had been filed seeking $50,000 damages, an injunction and accounting, charging the defendants with having infringed the plaintiff's song "I'll Always Remember Ronkonkomo," in the song, "Good Night My Love" in the 20th Century-Fox film "Stowaway."

Laguna Suit Settled

Michelina Laguna's suit in federal court in New York against Twentieth Century-Fox for alleged infringement by that company in the picture, "The World Moves On," has been settled out of court for a nominal sum after the plaintiff had won judgment in a Mexican court of 20,000 pesos on a story he had written, "La Paz en Laguerra."

Balaban & Katz Dividend

Balaban and Katz have paid over $22,000 in dividends on 13,000 shares of 7 per cent preferred stock. It is expected that this stock will be called soon, as the bank loan secured by the company to retire 13,000 shares at 110, the call price, rapidly is being paid off. No dividend was paid on the common stock.

Ryder Heads Coast SMPE

Loren Ryder, head of the Paramount sound department, has been elected chairman of the Pacific Coast Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers for 1939. A. M. Gundelfinger was elected secretary and Wesley Miller was elected to a two-year term as manager.

Norman Krasna, who recently resigned as a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer associate producer, has signed a contract as a writer at RKO Radio. His contract stipulates that he will work only with director-producers. His first assignment is with George Stevens.

Fay Bainter has signed a new Warner contract, calling for three pictures a year.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS ASK NEW TRADE POLICIES TO RESTORE ATTENDANCES

Blame Overseating, Double Bills, Circuit Power and Product Shortage for New Low Holiday Receipts

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

The adventures of British exhibitors over the recent holiday season, customarily the season in which, so to speak, they have paid the rent, has confirmed the long held belief that the new year's immediate need is for a new system of economics.

What was put into the film stocking proved but a sorry kind of jest, but, bitter as it was, it came almost as a logical climax to a period which has seen trade consistently and mercilessly diminishing.

Box office receipts for the festive season touched a new low, probably for all time.

Since the September crisis an acute stage of the redundancy problem, the growing dominance of the circuits, and the grim shortage of product have been probably the governing factors in intensifying the situation. To these have been added the excessively mild opening of the winter and changing social habits of the paying proletariat.

Gains by Circuits

Outside economists, however, are not so gloomy. They last declare that for four or five years theatre attendances have been on the steady increase, and that there is still a vast untapped market, point to the high dividends declared and maintained by such groups as Associated British, refuse to believe the trade's own problems are insoluble and suggest that the film industry's financial record is no worse than that of most other groups of businesses involving commercial risks.

It would seem, however, that the financial rosiness is found almost exclusively on the balance sheets of the circuits and larger film groups. The records of the independent exhibitors would not seem to justify over-much optimism.

Two Houses' Business Compared

Examination of the business registered in the past four months by two totally different types of houses reveal that the slump is not localized.

Hall "A" is a modern 700-seat house in a leading seaside town, with a moneyed clientele and a choice of the best product available. Its average weekly takings over a long period were £250 ($1,250). From September to December inclusively, this year, the average dropped to £190 ($950). This figure includes a record low of £81 ($405) and six weeks in which the theatre was in the red.

Hall "B" is an 850-seater in an industrial district with the poorest working class patronage, charging admission prices between fourpence and a shilling. Its average weekly takings over a long period were £220 ($1,100). Over the September-December 1938 period they dropped to £151 ($755), including a record low of £36 ($180). The house shows first-run pictures of the standard of "Hurricane" and "Test Pilot," yet had ten weeks in the red.

In London's West End, where at the holiday season the salaried and the wage-earners notoriously have in previous years spent their festive pocket money, Metro's "The Citadel" was probably unique in the fact that it drew record crowds to the Empire, Leicester Square. Otherwise West End trade has continued between 20 and 33 per cent of normal. A fair and average example of takings comes from one "super"—not far removed from the Empire—which on Boxing Day, notedly the year's peak box office day, would have taken between £700 ($3,500) and £900 ($4,500) under normal conditions. This Boxing Day it did not reach £200 ($1,000).

NO BENEFIT IN FILMS ACT, SAYS ROWSON

Of 32,000,000 Britons viewing motion pictures, only eight million see British films, Simon Rowson declared, addressing the British Kinematograph Society Monday night in London.

Mr. Rowson said there is no noticeable benefit from the new film legislation, with no increase either in the volume or value of British production.

Ben Jay, independent with houses of normal caliber on the East Coast and in the Home Counties, declares that trade has dropped from over the £200 ($1,000) a week mark to below £150 ($750) in the average second or third run position, and still is dropping.

Sees Habits Changing

Mr. Jay sees in the condition a reflection of a changing habit of film patrons. They are, he declares, more discriminating, so that fixed patronage no longer obtains. The high standard set by the West End "supers" with their two "A" films in one program makes them intolerant of the conventional shows to which they have long been used locally.

Kenneth Nyman, president of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, speaking as an independent, takes a keen view of the effect of the late 1938 weather, which by its initial mildness kept people away from the cinemas and then by a sharp drop in temperature diverted amusement money to the purchase of protective clothing and drugs and the payment of doctors' bills. On the wider field, however, Mr. Nyman contends, in non-redundant positions exhibitors might be able to carry on anyway.

Thirty Million Adult Non-Patrons

Outside economists, however, quote Simon Rowson, statistician, as authority for the statement that there are more than thirty million adults who do not go to cinemas regularly. Each million added to the ranks of weekly cinema-goers would bring in an extra two million pounds in grosses in a year without increased capital outlay. To this exhibitors baldly reply, "Where are the films to show them?" The 1938 total of films registered as available to the 5,000 cinemas was abnormally low at 644, or 152 less than the previous year.

Other students of the industrial scene plead that the film industry should take a lesson from the brewers and the fruit trade, and launch a national advertising campaign, but no section is more apathetic to this plan than the exhibitors themselves.

The number of regular patrons has been estimated by Mr. Rowson as 4,500,000, which in 5,000 theatres would average 900 seats capacity. Attendances by 15,000 patrons approximate 23,000,000 weekly, or 1,196,000,000 each year, the total paid by them reaching £46,000,000 ($230,000,000), an average of tenpence per seat. Of this nearly £7,000,000 ($35,000,000) goes in entertainment tax. Outside economists plead that the increase of trade is apparent by examining the figures for 1934, which were 957,000,000 admissions.

Noted, too, is that in the autumn-winter-spring season, when cinema-going normally would be at its highest, a minimum of £40,000,000 ($200,000,000) per annum is spent by the public on football pools.

These figures, however, say the exhibitors, do not take toll of the intense redundancy race or of the fact that the reservoir of available films is lower than ever before, or of the internecine warfare between circuits and independents on the question of two "super" pictures on a program.

Readjustment of values and policies, say exhibitors, is imperative for 1939. A closer coordination of building policies, a united trade platform on "super" programs and provision of a greater number of films, both American and British, are, they declare, essential for survival. A smaller, though no less active section is for complete overhauling of the film hire situation.

New Capital for Odeon

New capital approximating $25,000,000 is to be provided Odeon Theatres, Ltd. (Oscar Deutsch), to enable Odeon to proceed with its merger and expansion plans, it is understood, such as the deal with Gaumont-British and others, and construction of a number of theatres, possibly 25, it is understood.

Odeon's move to build new houses ends rumors of a transaction similar to the discussed merger of several months ago between Paramount's Astoria chain and Odeon.

Action of Elizabeth Allen against Metro British charging breach of contract, loss of publicity and damage to her professional reputation arising from the filming of "The Citadel," has been tabled.

Exhibitors To Meet

The Independent Theatre Protective Association has scheduled January 24th and 25th as the dates for its annual meeting. Officers of the Association have received a draft of the distributors' trade practice proposals for study, but have withheld comment on it.

Five regional meetings were convened by the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association in Kansas starting last Monday to discuss legislative and other problems. The meetings were held at Topeka, Salina, Stockton, Pratt and Independence. Beginning next week four meetings will be held in Western Missouri, Kansas City, Joplin, Sedalia, and probably Marysville.

Louis R. Lipstone, musical director and production head for Balaban and Katz Theatres, has been named head of the Paramount studio music department succeeding Boris Morros. Mr. Lipstone joined B & K in 1917 as first orchestra conductor and in 1926 he was made general musical director.

IN THE BRITISH STUDIOS

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Men at Work

British studios are at work on eight pictures. Most important of these are MGM's "Good-bye, Mr. Chips," and the Mayflower production, "Jamaica Inn," in which Alfred Hitchcock is directing Charles Laughton at the Associated British studios, Elstree.

Max Miller, British comedy star, was continuing work under the Warner-First National banner at the Teddington studios, with the period piece "The Good Old Days," directed by Roy William Neill.

At the Welwyn Studios of Associated British, overflow lot of the Elstree organization, Jack Buchanan was being directed by Thornton Freeland in "The Gang's All Here," his first for that company.

Islington's contribution was another Will Hay comedy, in which the star was being directed under the Gainsborough banner, by Marcel Varnel, in "Ask a Policeman."

At Worton Hall George Smith started work on "It's No Use Crying," an independent production being directed by Maclean Rogers.

Joins CAPAD

John Sutro, associated with London Films, has also joined the board of directors of CAPAD, newly formed production organization of producers. The board includes Arthur J. Rank, Stephen Courtauld, Captain the Hon. Richard Norton, Michael Balcon and Havelock Allan.

Films already completed by CAPAD are "The Gaunt Stranger," "The Ware Case" and "Let's Be Famous."

Scheduled for production soon are "There Ain't No Justice," "The Four Just Men," "The Return of the Four Just Men," "Epitaph for a Spy" and "A Young Man's Fancy."

Anna Lee, actress wife of film director Robert Stevenson, is to play in two films lined up for the next two months at the Ealing Studios. Both will be produced by Michael Balcon. The first, "The Four Just Men," is to be directed by Walter Forde and is a screen adaptation of an Edgar Wallace story. The second. "Young Man's Fancy," is to be directed by Robert Stevenson, who has held back production a month in order that Forde can use Anna Lee in his film. Miss Lee will play a character based upon Zazel, the original "human cannon ball," whose act thrilled London audiences in the nineties.

Featurettes

A series of two-reel featurettes grouped under the title of the "Roving Reporter" is planned by Technique Films to be made this year. It includes such titles as "Reporter Finds Love," "Reporter on Pay-Day" and "Reporter on Dancing." The technique sought is to deal in a racy manner with the hobbies and human side of the man in the street and celebrities of the day. They also announce the forthcoming production of a history of British motor-racing and a study of the growth of the Irish Free State.

THEY INTENDED TO CREATE THE FOG

Shooting has been completed on Irving Asher's second film for Columbia, "The Spy in Black." Poetic justice was lent the scene this week when the final night's shooting was planned to include artificially created rain and fog atmosphere. Nature, however, with a characteristic local gesture, provided Denham both with rain and fog that night; no efforts of effects or trick men were therefore needed, and scenes were shot with the genuine article in the effects tank at Denham Studios.

Unity Films

A new production organization, Unity Films, managing director of which is Miss Elsie Cohen, long known in repertory and continental cinemas in Britain, plans production of a film entitled "One Out of Millions."

The story deals with a boy from the South Wales mining district who comes to London to seek a fortune but finds disenchantment.

Directing the picture will be the author of the story, George Michael Hoellering, producer of the Hungarian film "Hortobagy."

Two Units

With a speed-up of production on the MGM British film "Good-bye, Mr. Chips," two units are working on the picture on separate sound stages at Denham.

Most recent sequences have been shot with the aid of the Highgate Officers Training Corps, 300 of whose members appear in a full dress review scene during which they pass by a uniformed general and a whiskered Mr. Chips, in the person of Robert Donat.

Itemized

Production has progressed on Max Miller's "The Good Old Days," in which the Cockney comedian has the role of a barnstormer of the 1840 era. Recent scenes have included Max Miller, with his company of touring players, arrested and put in the stocks at a Puritanically-minded country village, and a pie-eating contest for which the Teddington casting department combed the country for fat men.

George Smith and Maclean Rogers, producer and director, respectively, of pictures released under RKO and Columbia quota schedules, have joined hands to produce more modest films for exhibitor quota. The first of these is "No More Cows," a light comedy in which Jack Hobbs, Bruce Seton and George Carney will appear.

The production of a film bearing the ambitious title "Merchant Navy" is planned by Conway Productions, independent unit.

A story of racketeering in the British boxing world, "There Ain't No Justice" by James Curtis, is among the pictures shortly to be made by Michael Balcon at the Ealing Studios. Balcon plans to train his chosen star at the National Sporting Club.

Work has been completed on the George Formby comedy "Trouble Brewing," recently in production at the Ealing Studios under the direction of Anthony Kimmins.

Blames European Crisis For British Film Slump

Irving Asher, London Films associate producer, who arrived in New York from abroad Friday, scouted reports from London that the new quota law had had the effect of reducing British production. He ascribed the slump to the recent European crisis. Activity is being resumed, he said, and British production will stage a comeback in a few months.

Mr. Asher may make four triple quota films for Columbia in 1939-'40, at Denham, on an extension of the contract under which he made two films for Columbia last year. He conferred with Jack Cohn, Columbia vice-president, on Saturday, and left Sunday for the coast for conferences with Harry Cohn, president.

Canada's License Fee Less Than U. S. Charge

Colonel O. M. Biggar, solicitor for the Canadian Performing Rights Society (equivalent to ASCAP in the U. S.), has answered the strong protests of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters to the proposed increase in the society's license fees for 1939 to $154,588 from the present total of $83,081, by declaring that the new charge is only 75 per cent of the levy collected in the United States.

The new Canadian rate averages 14 cents per licensed receiving set in use in the Dominion as compared with the previous fee of eight cents charged by the Canadian Society and, according to Colonel Biggar, the levy in Canada is considerably less than that charged in other English-speaking countries. In Australia, he said, the charge is 33 cents, while that in New Zealand is 18 cents.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Columbia

"BLONDIE": Penny Singleton, Larry Simms, Arthur Lake, Gene Lockhart—Here is one picture that I wasn't ashamed to stand at the door and greet my patrons as they came out. It is a perfect cast and a howl from start to finish. There were no boats sinking, train wrecks, fires and no shooting, which goes to show such is not needed to make a good picture. Everybody okayed it as one of the best family pictures that I have ever played. Capacity business Sunday and above the average Monday. That's something for holidays for me to rave about. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 1-2.—Jim Haney, Milan Theatre, Milan, Ind. General patronage.

CITY STREETS: Edith Fellows, Leo Carrillo—Rather poor midweek business on Christmas week.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CRIME TAKES A HOLIDAY: Jack Holt, Marcia Ralston, Douglas Dumbrille—I'm sorry I can't pat you on the back for this one, Columbia. But, then, every producer makes his mistakes and this is only one mistake I have chalked up against you. Running time, 59 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

FLIGHT INTO NOWHERE: Jack Holt, Jacqueline Wells—Good Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

I AM THE LAW: Edward G. Robinson, Wendy Barrie, Barbara O'Neil, John Beal—They seem to put out consistently good "A" pictures and their "B" pictures are exceptionally entertaining also. I always try to give my honest opinion and to Columbia I say: "Keep up the good work." Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 20-21.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

IN EARLY ARIZONA: Bill Elliott, Dorothy Gulliver—A good action western that had enough gun play and killing in it to suit even my most active cowboys and cowgirls. Running time, 53 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

OVERLAND EXPRESS: Buck Jones, Marjorie Reynolds—Same old stuff. Didn't do much on Saturday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RANGER COURAGE: Bob Allen, Martha Tibbetts—A good cowboy picture, put out by a good company. Orchids to you, Columbia, not necessarily for this picture but for your consistently good product year in and year out. We hope that there are real big things in store for you later on. Running time, 58 minutes. Played December 24.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

WHEN G-MEN STEP IN: Don Terry, Jacqueline Wells—Good action business. Did average midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

First National

ADVENTURES OF ROBIN HOOD, THE: Errol Flynn, Oliva de Havilland, Basil Rathbone, Claude Rains, Ian Hunter—This did a fair business on Christmas.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

AMAZING DR. CLITTERHOUSE, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Claire Trevor, Humphrey Bogart, Allen Jenkins—A nice little show that we played rather late but print was in nice shape so it went over OK. Pleased on a weekend date. Running time, 87 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

BELOVED BRAT: Bonita Granville, Dolores Costello, Donald Crisp, Natalie Moorhead—My people criticized this as being too sad in spots.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BROTHER RAT: Wayne Morris, Priscilla Lane—Good comedy which pleased all. Business above average. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 25.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SHE LOVED A FIREMAN: Dick Foran, Ann Sheridan, Robert Armstrong—This ran into the pre-Christmas slump and didn't do much.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SUBMARINE D-1: Pat O'Brien, Wayne Morris, George Brent, Doris Weston—Good picture. Fair midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Grand National

ARIZONA DAYS: Tex Ritter—Only fair. Not nearly as good as "Sing, Cowboy, Sing." Am a little disappointed in Ritter.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

SOMETHING TO SING ABOUT: James Cagney, Evelyn Daw—Have read some bad reports in this department on this picture but I didn't find it that way at all. My patrons really enjoyed it. Evelyn Daw is very good in this. I see she is in Smith Ballew's latest western. She deserves better than this.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BLOCKHEADS: Laurel and Hardy, Patricia Ellis, Billy Gilbert—Had a full house on this picture. If that is what the people want, make more of them. Some people like spinach. Played December 29.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. Rural patronage.

BOYS TOWN: Spencer Tracy, Mickey Rooney, Henry Hull, Bobs Watson—Remember, I said in my report on "Love Finds Andy Hardy" that Mickey Rooney was headed for big things? Well, he is in the big time now. Every exhibitor knows his value now. I cashed in by playing "Slave Ship," a revival, simply because Rooney was in it and business was great. No sense in telling the exhibitors that this picture is one in a million and doing record breaking business all over the country because they must all know it by this time. If you haven't played it by all means do now. Your churches will go to town with you on this one. Spencer Tracy deserves special mention, as does little "Pee Wee," who in more ways than one stole the show, although he couldn't exactly steal it from Mickey Rooney. However, Rooney put it all over veteran Tracy. All I can say is play it, advertise it and watch the money roll in. Running time, 93 minutes. Played December 18-19.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

CHASER, THE: Dennie O'Keefe, Ann Morriss, Lewis Stone—Was good and pleased, but no draw. Played December 27.—A. H. Record, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. Rural patronage.

CHASER, THE: Dennie O'Keefe, Ann Morriss, Lewis Stone—A good "B" class picture that was enjoyed by all. We played it with "Boys Town" to a very satisfied audience. This picture divulges the old automobile accident insurance racket. Might hold its own for one day and should last three or four on a double feature. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 18-19.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

FIRST HUNDRED YEARS, THE: Robert Montgomery, Virginia Bruce, Warren William, Binnie Barnes—A very well made picture which failed to pay expenses on Sunday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GREAT WALTZ, THE: Luise Rainer, Fernand Gravet, Milizia Korjus—A gorgeous production that is absolutely a flop with us. Music lovers will rave when they see it but the masses do not go for such entertainment. Miss Korjus' voice is the finest we have heard on the screen. Rainer outdoes anything that she has ever attempted, and Gravet was excellent. Still they would not come in to see it. A wonderful picture but no draw. Running time, 104 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

LORD JEFF: Freddie Bartholomew, Mickey Rooney, Charles Coburn, Gale Sondergaard, Herbert Mundin—Plenty good; everyone pleased.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. Rural patronage.

LOVE FINDS ANDY HARDY: Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Cecilia Parker, Judy Garland, Fay Holden, Ann Rutherford, Lana Turner—A real picture packed with perfect entertainment, which opened to nice business but due to a cold wave fell off badly the second night.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

MERRILY WE LIVE: Constance Bennett, Brian Aherne, Billie Burke, Patsy Kelly—A well made and entertaining picture which, like most Metro pictures, took a nosedive here on Sunday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHINING HOUR, THE: Joan Crawford, Margaret Sullavan, Melvyn Douglas, Robert Young, Fay Bainter—Good. Pleased all. Extended runs in any spot. Running time, 75 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

TOO HOT TO HANDLE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Walter Pidgeon, Leo Carrillo, Walter Connolly—Small blizzard and cold weather hurt box office on this one. But the picture pleased everyone. It is filled with action from start to finish. Running time, 106 minutes. Played December 25-26.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TOO HOT TO HANDLE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Walter Pidgeon, Leo Carrillo, Walter Connolly—The title and the stars made a perfect combination. Played this on a Saturday when I usually have a double feature with western, but was so fast moving that the yokels didn't miss their hoss-opera. Gable does a bit of capable mugging and Loy even forgets to look so damn beautiful in one spot. You'll be happy if you play it. Running time, 101 minutes. Played November 11-12.—Bob Cox, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

Monogram

BAREFOOT BOY: Jackie Moran, Claire Windsor, Marcia Mae Jones, Ralph Morgan—This homey, down to earth offering was well liked by everybody. Top honors should be given to Marcia Mae Jones, for it is she who unravels the story, produces the spine tingling thrills as well as the hearty laughs. Use it on a double bill and you will not be disappointed. Running time, 64 minutes. Played December 25-26.—R. V. Rule, Gym and Community Theatres, Beaverton and Houghton Lake, Mich. Small town and country patronage.

LAND OF FIGHTING MEN: Jack Randall—Randall is fast becoming one of my best cowboy stars. Glad to hear he'll sing no more.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

WHERE THE WEST BEGINS: Jack Randall—A fair picture, nothing to brag about, and a lot better ones are available. Running itme, 54 minutes. Played December 25.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

Paramount

BARRIER, THE: Leo Carrillo, Jean Parker, James Ellison—Just what a small town audience loves, a very fine outdoor story, and was enjoyed by all my patrons. Running time, 8 reels. Played December 24.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

DOCTOR RHYTHM: Bing Crosby, Beatrice Lillie, Mary Carlisle, Andy Devine—A pleasing picture which couldn't buck the Christmas slump.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Minn. Small town patronage.

DOCTOR RHYTHM: Bing Crosby, Beatrice Lillie, Mary Carlisle, Andy Devine—This certainly is not one of Crosby's better pictures. Still it seems to please and did little better than average business.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

FRONTIERSMAN: William Boyd, Russell Hayden, George Hayes—In the opinions of my rural western fans, this was pretty punk. This had a little too much music or singing by the St. Brendan Boys' Choir, who are good but not for westerns. It's too bad that we can't get Hopalong in a good western any more as we have to double-feature all the Hopalongs now to get the people in, when before all we had to do was advertise a Cassidy western and that was enough. Running time, 74 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

HER JUNGLE LOVE: Dorothy Lamour, Ray Milland, Lynne Overman, Dorothy Howe—Played it the week before Christmas to very poor business in opposition to Keno.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HER JUNGLE LOVE: Dorothy Lamour, Ray Milland—One of my patrons said this was the best show that we have played here since 1912 when I opened up in the silent days. Play this by all means and watch the box office. Running time, 9 reels. Played December 29.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

HIGH, WIDE AND HANDSOME: Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott, Dorothy Lamour—Poorest crowd for the year. Some fair comments on same, but played too late. Personally though it good entertainment. Played December 15.—A. L. Dove, Bengough Theatre, Bengough, Saskatchewan, Can. Small town and rural patronage.

IF I WERE KING: Ronald Colman, Basil Rathbone, Frances Dee, Ellen Drew—Play this picture even if only you and your ushers see it. It's worth being in this business to see the smooth job that Colman does on a tender part, not to mention Rathbone in a role that even Barrymore would have trouble with. Not a money picture but one that makes people talk. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 19-20.—Bob Cox, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

PARTNERS OF THE PLAINS: William Boyd, Russell Hayden, Gwen Gaze—Just as fine a western as one could wish and no music either. These series are hard to beat.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

PROFESSOR, BEWARE: Harold Lloyd, Phyllis Welch, Lionel Stander, Raymond Walburn—The kids raved about this but it did rather slim business on Christmas Eve.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RIDE A CROOKED MILE: Akim Tamiroff, Frances Farmer, Leif Erikson—Good melodrama which pleased only average business. Paramount should have retained the original title, "Escape from Leavenworth." Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 30-31.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SAY IT IN FRENCH: Ray Milland, Olympe Bradna, Mary Carlisle, Irene Hervey—My patrons enjoyed this light comedy, and although business was way off the second night it was no fault of picture. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

SPAWN OF THE NORTH: George Raft, Dorothy Lamour, Henry Fonda, Akim Tamiroff, John Barrymore, Lynne Overman, Louise Platt—This is a very good picture and those who came enjoyed it 100 per cent. But my business was the lowest I ever played to on a Saturday and Sunday, due to the fact that I was the last to play it in this vicinity, it having played in six houses within from ten to 28 miles around me. What a nose dive it did for me. A few more of these and Milan will have a new garage. Played December 18-19.—Jim Haney, Milan Theatre, Milan, Ind. General patronage.

SPAWN OF THE NORTH: George Raft, Henry Fonda, Dorothy Lamour, Akim Tamiroff, John Barrymore, Lynne Overman, Louise Platt—Excellent business. And it was a fine picture, too. The scenery and the thrilling action sequences were wonderful. And we really liked Lamour better than in any picture for a long time. In this she didn't have the sarong and her beauty to help, so was completely on her own and she did a nice job. Running time, 112 minutes. Played December 18-19.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

STOLEN HEAVEN: Gene Raymond, Olympe Bradna, Lewis Stone, Glenda Farrell—Played this on Cash Night and seemed to be well liked. Of course, I can see plainly that in some situations it wouldn't be liked, and was a little afraid of it myself. But had several compliments on it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

THANKS FOR THE MEMORY: Bob Hope, Shirley Ross, Charles Butterworth—Very light entertainment, and I mean light. Had several clever situations and lines in this but, on the whole, I thought it rather poor and messy. Neither Hope nor Ross are strong enough here to carry a picture alone and this proves it. Business poor and I can't blame the people when I have to show this type of stuff. Running time, 78 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

THANKS FOR THE MEMORY: Bob Hope, Shirley Ross, Charles Butterworth—Here is a cute little picture that will tickle you all the way. Well staged, snappy and different. Running time, 75 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

Republic

LADIES IN DISTRESS: Alison Skipworth, Polly Moran, Bob Livingston—Entertaining picture. Pleased the Saturday crowd.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

NIGHT HAWK, THE: Robert Livingston, June Travis, Robert Armstrong—Just another gangster melodrama which failed to draw. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 26-27.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

PALS OF THE SADDLE: Three Mesquiteers (John Wayne, Ray Corrigan, Max Terhune), Doreen McKay—There is plenty of action plus a good story well acted in this dressed up Western, the first in which John Wayne appeared, and I am sure it pleased the men and children but a little too rough for the fair ones who do not approve of the shooting and the killing which is always predominant in most of these. A little music or comedy would improve this series and make them acceptable to all classes. Running time, 58 minutes. Played December 30-31.—R. V. Rule, Gym and Community Theatres, Beaverton and Houghton Lake, Mich. Small town and country patronage.

SANTA FE STAMPEDE: Three Mesquiteers (John Wayne, Ray Corrigan, Max Terhune), June Martel—Up to the average of Three Mesquiteers. A good western.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TENTH AVENUE KID: Bruce Cabot, Beverly Roberts, Tommy Ryan—This is our first picture in which this new juvenile star (Tommy Ryan) appeared, and we liked it. Although his voice is a little husky, he has a good personality, a swell singing voice and he acts like a veteran. A second Mickey Rooney and I shall not hesitate to book any picture in which he appears hereafter. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 1-2.—R. V. Rule, Gym and Community Theatres, Beaverton and Houghton Lake, Mich. Small town and country patronage.

RKO Radio

BREAKING THE ICE: Bobby Breen, Charles Ruggles, Dolores Costello, Irene Dare—A nice little picture enjoyed by all.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. Rural patronage.

GO CHASE YOURSELF: Joe Penner, Lucille Ball—Only fair. Joe is OK once in a while but our booking office made the mistake of booking three within almost three weeks and, boy, did the people get sick of seeing too much of Joe Penner. He might hold out as the co-feature on a good bill for a couple of days. You know Joe; use your own judgment. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 20-21.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

I'M FROM THE CITY: Joe Penner, Kay Sutton—My first Penner picture. My people don't know him, only on the radio. Would consider it fair entertainment.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. Rural patronage.

MR. DOODLE KICKS OFF: Joe Penner, June Travis, Richard Lane—A very good slapstick comedy with Joe Penner as his best. Played on prize nights to capacity business both nights. Played December 21-22.—Jim Haney, Milan Theatre, Milan, Ind.

MR. DOODLE KICKS OFF: Joe Penner, June Travis, Richard Lane—One of Joe Penner's best pictures but that doesn't mean an awful lot. Penner is OK maybe once a year, but if played too often he gets tiresome, and I don't mean maybe. 'Nuff said. Use your own judgment. Running time, 77 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

SAINT IN NEW YORK: Louis Hayward, Kay Sutton—A fair series and suited for the co-feature on a double feature bill. Nothing to brag about and I wouldn't endorse it for real good business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 22-23.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

STAGE DOOR: Katharine Hepburn, Ginger Rogers, Adolphe Menjou, Andrea Leeds—A swell show and a perfect cast. Hepburn and Rogers were both superb and the entire movie was grand. This picture actually moved our audiences, and in order to do this any exhibitor knows that the picture and actors and actresses must be good to accomplish such a feat. Adolphe Menjou deserves special mention. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 25.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

ALWAYS GOODBYE: Barbara Stanwyck, Herbert Marshall, Binnie Barnes, Ian Hunter, John Russell, Cesar Romero—And to think that last season we eliminated this one. Then this year we go back and pick it up and what a pickup! One of the grandest pictures we ever played, with a swell cast and a honey of a boy in little John Russell. Where do they find these lovable little fellows? Let's have more of him. And Barbara was wonderful as she always is with a big job of picking a husband, having to choose between Marshall and Hunter. And don't forget Binnie Barnes or Cesar Romero. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 23-24.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BARONESS AND THE BUTLER, THE: William Powell, Annabella, Helen Westley, Henry Stephenson—Played on Bargain Night and my rural trade did not like it. Picture is OK, I guess, but just not good for a small town like mine.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

BATTLE OF BROADWAY: Victor McLaglen, Brian Donlevy, Louise Hovick, Raymond Walburn—Boy, oh boy, how McLaglen slipped from his days of "The Informer." Too bad, too, because he wasn't a half bad actor. But when they stick him in such a picture as this "Battle of Broadway" he doesn't stand a chance. At its best, it's justa "B" picture and you know what that means. I think if given half a chance McLaglen could be "Big Time" again. Why not give the fellow a break, Fox? Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 24.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

CHECKERS: Jane Withers, Stuart Irwin, Una Merkel, Marvin Stephens—A swell little picture with the star of kiddy actors. Temple is all washed up now but Withers can still hold her own in any picture. Give Withers the parts, cast and stories that you gave Temple when she was in her prime and you will be doing something, Fox. These Withers pictures are OK, and they do a nice little business here. Running time, 78 minutes. Played December 26.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

CITY GIRL: Ricardo Cortez, Phyllis Brooks—Very fine little program picture. Played on Bargain Night.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

FIVE OF A KIND: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt, Claire Trevor, Joan Davis, Slim Summerville—Just a fair offering. The gals are sweet but they made an unearthly sound trying to sing. It pleased 50 per cent.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. Rural patronage.

FOUR MEN AND A PRAYER: Loretta Young, Richard Greene, George Sanders, David Niven, William Henry—We played this during Christmas week so, of course, we couldn't expect too much from it. It is a different type of picture and some of my patrons enjoyed it and others didn't care for it. It is a rather old picture, anyway, so don't put too much confidence in it. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 22-23.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

GATEWAY: Don Ameche, Arleen Whelan, Lyle Talbot, Gregory Ratoff, Binnie Barnes—Much better than we expected. Action and comedy were plentiful and the story was different. Running time, 73 minutes. Played December 21-22.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

I'LL GIVE A MILLION: Warner Baxter, Peter Lorre, Marjorie Weaver, Jean Hersholt—Only a fair picture. I can't imagine Lorre in the part he plays anyway. Running time, 75 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

JUST AROUND THE CORNER: Shirley Temple, Joan Davis, Charles Farrell, Armanda Duff, Bert Lahr, Bill Robinson—The first Temple picture here in two years, and it didn't draw half of what the last one here did. This was a very satisfying picture that doesn't rate the adverse criticism, in my opinion, that some of the exhibitors have been giving it, but then I'm no judge, as I haven't seen her other pictures of late. This pleased about all who saw it here and that is something. Running time, 71 minutes.—A. E. Eliason. Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

KEEP SMILING: Jane Withers, Gloria Stuart, Henry Wilcoxon, Helen Westley—Believe Jane is slipping a little here. Used to be good for extra grosses but they will have to give her a change of picture type. She is always doing the same things. Running time, 77 minutes. Played December 16-17.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT COLLEGE: Ritz Brothers, Gloria Stuart, Tony Martin, Joan Davis—A good picture put out by the Ritz Brothers but, my oh my, was the picture cut up and in bad shape when we received it. True, it was a year old when we played it, but even at that no exchange should permit a print to be sent to an exhibitor in the condition that the one was in that I received. However, if you can get a print that is OK, the picture itself is all right. Running time, 94 minutes. Played December 26.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

LITTLE MISS BROADWAY: Shirley Temple, Jimmy Durante, George Murphy, Edna Mae Oliver—Shirley Temple, I am sorry to say, is all washed up. However, this picture did do better than average due to the fact that the children did not have any school and we packed them in on the matinees. Build her up as much as possible and try and squeeze every last cent out of her pictures as she is due for a big downfall any time now. In fact I think "Just Around the Corner" was the start of her way downward. Running time, 71 minutes. Played December 27-28.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

LOVE AND HISSES: Walter Winchell, Ben Bernie, Simone Simon, Bert Lahr—Not as good as I was expecting. Business also not so good. Did not like Bert Lahr.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

LOVE AND HISSES: Ben Bernie, Walter Winchell, Simone Simon, Bert Lahr—A picture that is old but good. Yes, fellas and gals, yowsah, yowsah, this picture is O.K. Flash! Flash! Theatres all over the country played that Bernie and "yours truly" picture to capacity audience. Why couldn't it be done again? There's a thought for you exhibitors. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 27-28.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

MY LUCKY STAR: Sonja Henie, Richard Greene, Joan Davis, Cesar Romero, Buddy Ebsen—Was a nice picture. It draws and pleases and that is what counts. The last reel had a beautiful ending. Played December 25.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. Rural patronage.

MYSTERIOUS MR. MOTO: Peter Lorre, Mary Maguire—Seemed to please on a weekend. Had enough action and suspense to keep my western fans on edge and in their seats, even though it was a mystery picture. Running time, 62 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Shirley Temple, Gloria Stuart, Jack Haley, Randolph Scott—This did a good business on Thanksgiving but we had many complaints from patrons who expected to see the Kate Douglas Wiggin story of this name. There ought to be a law.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROAD DEMON: Henry Arthur, Joan Valerie—One of those good little entertaining pictures that pleases all. Running time, 68 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

SHARPSHOOTERS: Brian Donlevy, Lynn Bari—Enough comedy and action in this to please here. A good program picture for a small town. Running time, 62 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

SLAVE SHIP: Mickey Rooney, Wallace Beery, Warner Baxter, Elizabeth Allan—Now is the time to book in this feature, exhibitors, as Mickey Rooney is now at his height and you can cash in plenty on his popularity. Plug Mickey Rooney and not the picture and you should do swell business. We did anyway. Running time, 92 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

STRAIGHT, PLACE AND SHOW: Ritz Brothers, Richard Arlen, Phyllis Brooks, Ethel Merman—Gave good satisfaction and did capacity business. If a picture draws the crowds, it's a good picture to me. The public is the judge. Personally, I did not like it. Played December 25-26.—Jim Haney, Milan Theatre, Milan, Ind. General patronage.

TRIP TO PARIS, A: Jed Prouty, Shirley Deane, Russell Gleason—These series are always good. They draw the family type of trade. Played December 31.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. Rural patronage.

United Artists

THERE GOES MY HEART: Fredric March, Virginia Bruce, Patsy Kelly, Alan Mowbray, Nancy Carrol, Eugene Palette—My personal opinion of this is that movie critics should stick to their trade and not attempt to write stories for the industry. This had a few laughs in it but on the whole it was nothing and went over the same way. Running time, 84 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

Universal

FRANKENSTEIN (reissue): Boris Karloff; DRACULA (reissue): Bela Lugosi—This just about paid expenses on Saturday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE TOUGH GUYS: "Dead End Kids," Robert Wilcox, Helen Parrish—Very good. No business before Christmas, which was the tough part for the exhibitor.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

LITTLE TOUGH GUYS IN SOCIETY: "Dead End Kids," Mary Boland, Edward Everett Horton, Mischa Auer, Helen Parrish—A swell little picture that was a little too tough for our audience. Those who saw the picture were loud in its acclaim, but we could not get them in. Running time, 67 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

LITTLE TOUGH GUYS IN SOCIETY: "Dead End Kids," Mary Boland, Edward Everett Horton, Mischa Auer, Helen Parrish—Without a doubt the funniest and best from Universal this year. This kept my patrons in a continuous state of uproar and high humor. It isn't the best picture of the year but it will take its place here in this situation as one of the funniest. Running time, 68 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

SERVICE DE LUXE: Constance Bennett, Vincent Price, Charles Ruggles, Mischa Auer, Helen Broderick, Joy Hodges—A very clever piece of entertainment that would have hit the tops had Miss Bennett had a better known leading man. The audience was about evenly divided as to comment. All in all we feel that it will make money in any situation for a short run. Running time, 86 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

STATE POLICE: John King, Constance Moore—Good action picture. Fair midweek business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

YOUTH TAKES A FLING: Joel McCrea, Andrea Leeds, Dorothea Kent, Helen Parrish—A very nice little comedy that pleased 100 per cent here. The drawing power of the picture was very poor but those who came enjoyed themselves. Joel McCrea might have been a little too dumb in this but that is a very minor detail. Personally, I got quite a kick out of this and especially from the looks of some of the young gals who came with their boy friends and had to take it on the chin. Running time, 78 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen. Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

YOUTH TAKES A FLING: Joel McCrea, Andrea Leeds, Dorothea Kent, Helen Parrish—A dandy program picture and will please anywhere.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

COWBOY FROM BROOKLYN, THE: Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien, Priscilla Lane, Dick Foran—Here was a surprise box office picture. Gross about 50% above normal. Guess it was the cowboy title. Also we have not used either Powell or O'Brien lately and they were well liked formerly. The picture was good with plenty of laughs. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 28-29.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RACKET BUSTERS: George Brent, Gloria Dickson, Humphrey Bogart, Walter Abel—Good action picture. Running time, 71 minutes. Played December 14-15.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SISTERS, THE: Bette Davis, Errol Flynn, Anita Louise—Very nice picture but no business. Probably too close to Christmas. San Francisco earthquake scenes were well done. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 28-29.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

VALLEY OF THE GIANTS: Wayne Morris, Claire Trevor, John Litel, Charles Bickford, Alan Hale—Here's another that you can go to town on. Has all the elements needed at the box office, and color to boot. Alan Hale makes the picture and color doesn't hurt Claire Trevor a bit. Action flavored with action and with a bit of action added was the recipe for this opus. Should ring four bells at the B.O. Running time, 79 minutes. Played December 26-27.—Bob Cox, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

Miscellaneous

WORLD IS OURS, THE: We liked this subject very much. In fact, believe it was the only good thing we got out of our contribution and expenses of $25 for Movie Quiz. Wasn't that a bust.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

ANKLES AWAY: Andy Clyde—Not very funny.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small patronage.

HOME ON THE RAGE: Broadway Comedies—Andy Cldye in a good slapstick comedy.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ALADDIN'S LANTERN: Our Gang—This was a fairly good short, especially enjoyed by the kiddies. This is especially suited for a Saturday matinee when all of the kiddies in town will be at your theatre. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

BURIED TREASURE: Captain and the Kids—A nice little cartoon with those famous comic strip people, the Captain and the Kids. This should prove to be a very profitable series so give them all you've got. Running time, eight minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

DAY AT THE BEACH, A: Captain and the Kids—The best Captain and the Kids cartoon we have had this season. Very good. Running time, eight minutes. —A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

HIDE AND SHRIEK: Our Gang—Rather tame stuff.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD HANDICAP: MGM Miniatures—An excellent Miniature by this company with all Negro singers. Out of the ordinary and very good. Running time, nine minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

HOT ON ICE: Pete Smith Specialtiies—A grand hockey reel. Everybody liked it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HOT ON ICE: Pete Smith Specialties—This one-reeler on ice hockey is very good and it pleased all. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

MUSIC MADE SIMPLE: Robert Benchley—Not as good as some of his others.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THINK IT OVER: Crime Doesn't Pay—A darn good series. They prove very interesting, are educational and last but most important they teach one that crime positively does not pay. Running time, 20 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

Paramount

BULLDOZING THE BULL: Popeye the Sailor—A good Popeye cartoon.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

COWBOY AND SHORTY: Paragraphics—A funny cartoon.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

EASY ON ICE: Headliners—Henry King and band. Just a fair band act.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FROLICKING FROGS: Grantland Rice Sportlights —A good sport reel.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HAL KEMP AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Headliners —A dandy band act. One of the good ones.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MUTINY AIN'T NICE: Popeye the Sailor—Good cartoon.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ON WITH THE NEW: Betty Boop Cartoons—Betty Boop and not so hot.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

OUT OF THE INKWELL: Betty Boop Cartoons—An interesting little cartoon with the famous Betty Boop. Don't be afraid of this short, as they all eat this type up. Running time, seven minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

POPULAR SCIENCE: No. 1 (New Series)—Entertaining science reel in full color.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

PUDGY IN THRILLS AND CHILLS: Betty Boop Cartoon—Average Betty Boop which pleased all.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

UNUSUAL OCCUPATIONS: No. 3.—Very good.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO Radio

BRAVE LITTLE TAILOR: Walt Disney Cartoons —If anybody had made this but Disney we would say a fair colored cartoon. However, way below the Disney average.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MARCH OF TIME, THE: No. 1—One of the best shorts on the market today. I gave it all of my marquee space on both sides, gave it just as much space in the paper as my feature picture, put out 1,000 heralds on this short alone, and gave it mention on another 1,000 heralds. I had a special sheet board for it and had plenty of 11 x 14s and a window streamer up on it. This is the short that will pay off in cold dollars and cents when exploited correctly. Running time, 20 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

United Artists

LITTLE HIAWATHA: Silly Symphonies—A very fine Disney. Enjoyed by all.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Universal

DOWN ON THE BARN: Mentone Musical Comedies—Above the average for this series. These Mentones are always spoiled with one or two singers appearing alone in order to lengthen the running time. The audience is always restless when this occurs, which proves they are not even listening. This one, however, is worth showing.—R. V. Rule, Gym and Community Theatre, Beaverton and Houghton Lake, Mich. Small town and country patronage.

LATIN HI-HATTIN': Mentone Musical Comedies—We did not care for this one because it is about 75% Spanish. Therefore, it should be well liked in Mexican neighborhoods. Running time, 16 minutes.—R. V. Rules, Gym and Community Theatres, Beaverton and Houghton Lake, Mich. Small town and country patronage.

MUSIC AND MODELS: Mentone Musical Comedies —A fine two-reel vaudeville subject. The best of the Mentones so far this year.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RHYTHM CAFE: Mentone Musical Comedies—These Mentone Musicals are all good. You cannot miss on this series. Excellent. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

CLYDE McCOY AND HIS ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Think McCoy is the real McCoy when it comes to dance bands for the movies. He seems to have what it takes to put over one of these reels.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

DEFYING DEATH: Floyd Gibbons' "Your True Adventure"—Very interesting True Adventure subject.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

ISLE OF THE PINGO PONGO: Merrie Melodies —One of the best color cartoons we have had. These Merrie Melodies are as good as the Walt Disney stuff.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

JUGGLING FOOL, THE: Vitaphone Varieties—Very interesting subject. Maybe it's because we like vaudeville but it is a fact that we would like to see more such shorts. Running time, 10 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MAJOR LIED 'TIL DAWN: Merrie Melodies—A fairly good color short, although it does not compare with some of the other real clever shorts that Vitaphone has put out. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

MAJOR LIED 'TIL DAWN: Merrie Melodies—A knockout colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

London Films Separated From Pinewood-Denham

The new English production company, Denham and Pinewood Studios, Ltd., formed from the merger of the two plants, this week formally ratified the deal, and announced intentions of making "agreements" with Pinewood, Prudential Assurance, Equity Assurance, and London Films, all of them financially interested. Studio operations were revealed to have been separated from those of London Film Productions. The new company is capitalized at $3,750,000. First directors named were H. E. George and Captain Richard Norton.

(A) P. and L. Felt reply, "If carbons are overloaded, instead of increase in screen illumination there is apt to be a decrease for the reason that spindling will almost certainly occur, which will decrease the crater area without appreciably increasing unit area brilliance thereof.

Overloading carbons therefore may safely be set down as at the least showing small if any increase in illumination, with the probability the other way. It therefore represents waste of electric power. More than that, it has the effect of raising the already high temperature of not only the conductors inside the lamphouse, but also the carbon jaws, thus increasing liability to roughening or pitting of the contact surface and increasing resistance of the parts. As a secondary consideration the resulting increase of temperature inside the lamphouse adds unnecessary heat to the light-collecting element (mirror or collector lens), which certainly is no advantage, to say the least."

That answer is a real one, since it not only answers the question competently, but proceeds to analyze the various effects in detail.

(B) L. H. Kelley answers, "Within their specified current range, SRA carbons are capable of producing from about 5,800 to 6,880 candle-power for the 10-mm trim; about 6,750 to 9,950 candle-power for the 12 mm trim; about 10,200 to 12,000 candle-power for the 13-mm trim; and about 14,250 to a trifle more than 15,000 candle-power for the 14-mm trim."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 144

(A) Is sound transmitted through the air in straight lines? Explain.

(B) What happens when sound waves reach the wall of an auditorium? Explain in detail.

(C) What is the effect when sound meets an auditorium wall that has reflective value as applies to sound waves? Explain in detail.

(Note in answering questions such as these, it is necessary not only to give the bare answer, but also to tell us what happens insofar as has to do with ultimate results, and why it happens.)

(C) G. E. Doe says, "The net result will be over-heating of carbons and carbons jaws, which will increase temperature inside the lamphouse and thus increase possibility of lens breakage (if any), as well as damage to mirror, since I believe that slow but sure damage is inflicted by any increase in the already high temperature inside the lamphouse. Also, it is likely there will be some harm worked to the conductors. Certainly their resistance will be increased, which means added resistance, with consequent loss of power.

"The most serious damage, however, will be probability of roughening of contact surfaces, which certainly represents added resistance and probability of reduction of light production."

As to Section D, J. R. Prater's answer would be hard to improve upon. Here it is:

"The best method of cleaning arc lamp carbon contacts depends on the type of lamp and the amount of amperage used. With high amperage high-intensity lamps where the contact jaws are easily removable for cleaning, the management should provide a motor equipped with a rotary wire brush. This does the job thoroughly and quickly, also makes it easy for the projectionist to give carbon contact jaws the daily cleaning they must have to give best results.

Occasionally a small bit of metal may form into a ball on the contact surface of a carbon jaw. Such formations are very hard and are best removed with the careful use of an emery wheel, which should be mounted on the opposite end of the motor shaft—carrying the wire brush. The addition of an inexpensive drill chuck, cloth buffer, and many other attachments suited to individual projection room needs make this motor a very practical and really indispensable part of the work bench.

"With lamps operating at lower amperages, the carbon contact jaws are usually more difficult to remove and take apart; also, they oxidize more slowly and can be cleaned easily while in the lamp. For such lamps, the management should provide crocus cloth and metal rods slightly smaller in diameter than each size of carbon used, each rod preferably slotted lengthwise to a depth about equal to its radius, for two or three inches back from one end. One edge of a piece of the crocus cloth can be inserted in the slot and enough cloth wrapped around the rod to make its diameter equal to that of a carbon. By clamping this in the carbon jaw under normal, or with a bit less pressure, and turning the rod while it is pushed back and forth a few times, the contact jaws will be cleaned bright and smooth at the proper curvature just to fit the carbon. Crocus cloth may be wrapped on a carbon and used similarly, but this is more difficult to do and does not do as good a job because of the oversized diameter."

Theatre Building Active In Ontario

Theatre building is on the upswing in Canada, and especially in the province of Ontario, as shown by a new survey of that territory. A list of Ontario theatres recently completed, or in construction, follows:

The Riviera, in Preston, completed by J. O. Scott, who is also rebuilding the Royal, in Peterborough, at a cost of about $40,000. Mr. Scott is operator of the Weston, in Weston.

In St. Catherines, a city of 25,000, three theatres are being erected, one by H. Freedman, owner of the Circle, in Toronto, and a past president of the Independent Theatres Association; another by Philip Kamin, a hotel proprietor; the third by Hanson Theatres Corporation.

Premier Theatres, Ltd., will build a new house in Port Colburne, to replace the Strand, which was burnt down early in December.

Hanson Theatres Corporation is erecting a 1,000 seater at Dunville; William Karp of Montreal is converting an Ottawa structure into a 400 seat theatre, at a cost of $20,000; I. Grader is erecting a 465 seat house at Welland, which will be run by 20th Century Theatres, Ltd., of Toronto; E. Anderson is remodeling and enlarging his Andre theatre, at Caledonia; Thomas E. Walton has remodeled his National theatre in downtown Toronto.

There is more building in the north of the province. In Sudbury, a new theatre is under work, which will be operated by J. Cohen, of Toronto. Famous Players Canadian Corporation opened its second house in Galt. The Capitol is the other. In Timmons and in Ansonville, new houses were opened.

Film exchanges in Chicago were praised for vigilant observance of fire rules, at a meeting held recently on the new building code which the city has adopted.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor
GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

"BIG PROPOLISHUNS"

One of our favorite circuit ad heads tells a story of his theatre days concerning the promoter who was arranging a benefit band contest of a Saturday. It would start with 50 bands, at least, marching in a giant parade right by the theatre to the city park where the competitions were to be held. Thousands were expected to line the streets. The theatre's share of the expense would be "just a few hundred bucks", said the high-pressure guy, a mere nothing to the extra business the house could anticipate because of the crowds.

The adman turned him down. Two hundred hard-earned dollars to encourage people to see a parade and listen to a band concert free of charge was not his idea of an advantageous exchange for the boxoffice. Summing it up, the adman said he never cared much for these "big propolishuns". He prefers tieins that are less colossal where the returns can be figured more favorably in relation to the outlay.

We know a manager (he isn't the only one of his kind, of course) who is inoculated with the virus of "big propolishuns". At the drop of a hat or less, the lad immediately goes into his act—the giant tieups and promotions he is lining up for the next show or for next week. That these tremendous plans never seem to come off in the expected spectacular manner does not dampen his misplaced enthusiasm. He continues to have delusions of exploitation grandeur.

Much effort, time and money is wasted by ambitious theatremen in frenzied pursuit of giant promotions at the expense of less costly and often more profitable exploitation closer to home.

THEY SURE HAS, GRAN' PAPPY

It's one of the smarter stunts by the McCarthy Twentieth Century-Fox ad forces in advance of "Jesse James", that reprint of Vol. 1, No. 1 of the famous dime novel for distribution on local dates. Earl Wingart sends over a copy—"just to bring back your boyhood memories". It sure do, Earl.

Those were the days when the up and coming juvenile divided his time between swapping dime novels, reading them in school concealed between the jumbo covers of the geography book, hiding them in the barn to escape parental wrath.

Today's youngster taps his Dad—the old softie—for movie money to thrill to the same didoes on the screen. Ah, mi, times have certainly changed.

POOR OLE SHOWMANSHIP

The term showmanship must possess an hypnotic rhythm that makes it the easy prey of almost anyone who can pronounce it. It just rolls off the tongue, stamps the user as one privy to all the esoteric lore of the first Barnum and, more often than not, allows him to cash in on his supposed savvy at attractive space rates.

Turning typographical handsprings before the readers of a printing trade paper, the confident Zenn Kaufman, who once wrote a book about showmanship in business, starts his article by saying:

"When you hear the word showmanship, you quickly think of Barnum, hokum and other high-pressure selling. You picture an oily-haired real estate salesman high-pressuring an old couple out of lifelong savings in exchange for an acre of first-class swamp land. In fact, the word showmanship has even carried a certain flavor of dishonesty."

On the contrary, when we read articles in outside publications on showmanship, we picture what a soft touch it must be for insufficiently informed authors who write about it.

AS YOU SAY, GENTLEMEN

Although the initial announcement of the 1939 Quigley Awards was slated to be made in a later issue, there was enough inquiry to indicate that the members would rather hear about it right now. We bow to the will of the customers, and on a following page break out with the first blast about the new policy, to start on February first.

Folks do say that the new setup should about top anything in the history of the Awards. Well, we hope so.

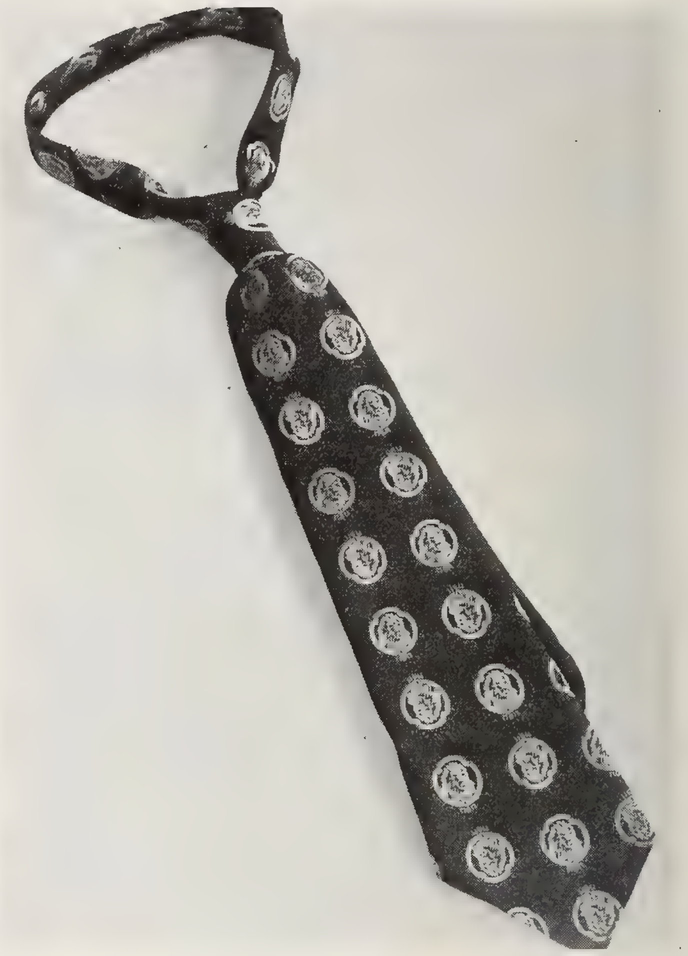
Round Table In Pictures

Riding along on the crest of the current jitterbug craze, John L. Mitchell, at the Genesee Theatre, Waukegan, Ill., tried a novelty slant which he says proved very effective. Locating a group of local dancers who were doing a modernized square dance, John presented them on stage in competition with his jitterbug couples. Shown above are the entrants who were photographed by local newspaper cameraman, story and picture running in paper.



Received with great appreciation among European and South American branch offices of the company was the Christmas gift to exhibitors of special M-G-M necktie, sent out over the holidays by the Prague office and reported here by A. Lapiner of the branch publicity department. The neckwear was also used as prizes in contest for exhibitors.

Another good Christmas stunt for the files is the reproduction at left of W. C. Ricord, Jr.'s lobby display at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, Hollywood. One of the theatre's staff dressed as Kris Kringle was stationed at desk next to toys with register in which kiddies were invited to sign their names. Through this medium, Ricord was enabled to swell the number of names on his mailing list.

Located in the grand lounge of the New York Roxy to advertise the world premiere of "Jesse James" is this enormous setpiece showing various portions of the United States and mainly those in which James traveled or in which he staged his numerous exploits. Tying in map with story, individual scene stills representing episodes were placed on the map over the spots referred to in the picture and properly identified. Map, in relief, has various colors for rivers, etc., with colored lamps in back of the logs on the base pointing up the illumination. Size of setpiece can be determined by 6-foot standing cutout of Jesse James to left. Further dramatic effect was incorporated above title with the word "Wanted" on flasher. Setpiece designed by Homer H. Harman, Roxy ad head, and executed by George Hirsch of Poster Craftsman.

Included in the campaign put on by Joe DiPesa, Loew publicist, Boston, for "Out West with the Hardys", was a six-day contest in the Boston Traveler. Readers were asked to write a letter on "Why the Hardys Should Visit Boston". Five judges shown in the usual left-to-right are Charles Coyle, director of public relations, Chamber of Commerce; Martin Adamo, president, N. E. Drug Council; Walter Seaver, managing director, Hotel Lenox; Frederick Sullivan, member of Boston School Committee, and Willard Davis, editor, Hotel and Travel News, looking over entries received.

Dressing theatre fronts is in order in Santa Anna, El Salvador, S. A., just as it is here. At right may be seen treatment accorded the opening of "Tropic Holiday" at the Teatro Nacional by Manuel Vieytez. To be noticed with interest is the background of the picture's title, which happens to be the Paramount trademark. Illuminated sign is approximately 20 feet in height and may be seen for blocks distant. In addition to being outstanding in the field of exploitation in South America, the Teatro Nacional is also known for being one of the oldest and most beautiful places of amusement in that sector.

Rosenthal Reports Numerous Activities

Boys' club drum corps paraded to the Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., to herald the opening of Morris Rosenthal's "Drums" date. Headed by police escort, boys covered main streets, winding up in front of house where they played a half-hour concert.

Boy Scoutmasters attended in a group, dedicating opening day to Boy Scout Day in honor of Sabu, who is a scout. Y.M.C.A.s posted letters of endorsement and had discussions before various groups week ahead of opening, bookmarks were distributed by public libraries, librarians in all branches talking about India and "Drums" and heralds were inserted by Liberty boys.

For his lobby, Rosenthal promoted use of various types of drums which were prominently displayed; all telegraph clocks carried a card with title and playdates and large compo board drum for display purposes was landed in local hat store window.

Prominent Organizations Endorse "Dawn Patrol"

Representatives of important national organizations interested in fostering an opinion favorable to peace have put themselves on record as whole-heartedly approving the spirit and theme of "Dawn Patrol," which they recently witnessed at a Hays' office preview.

Following the termination of the screening, the attending bodies expressed themselves enthusiastically about the film and promised their cooperation in disseminating its message to their roster of members. In addition, the Hays' organization is sending a letter to its mailing list, urging parents to have their children see the picture.

Contest Highlights "Brother Rat" Date

Contest in the Cleveland Plain Dealer was planted by manager Ed Miller and publicist Manny Pearlstein, Warner's Hippodrome for the opening of "Brother Rat." Entrants were requested to submit the longest list of colleges and their football team nicknames that they could. Opening story consisting of two columns broke two days in advance of opening, subsequent stories followed daily during run.

Theatremen contacted the president of the local V. M. I. alumni, who in turn notified all members of the showing. An exhibit at the main branch of the Public Library, featured stills from the picture and books relative to military schools. Tieup was also effected with the Cleveland Press Squadron of the Junior Aviators that netted the theatre considerable valuable newspaper space.

Joint Christmas Party Held in Baltimore

Robert Marhenke, manager of the Broadway Theatre, and Walter Cohen at the Leader Theatre, Baltimore, held a joint Christmas party for local kids. Through cooperation of leading merchants, ice cream, candy and cake were promoted for the special show, tickets for which were distributed through the police department.

Mayor Howard W. Jackson and other local dignitaries attended the special show at which the invocation was delivered. Beside the current attraction, cartoons and stage attractions were booked; show was broadcast over WEBM and WFBR, additional publicity gained through the personal appearance on stage of the local St. Patrick's boys' choir which sang Christmas carols.

Ties "Duke" to Hockey Matches

Matching the two leading amateur hockey teams of Philadelphia in a game at the Arena for the Edward Small trophies was a novel stunt engineered by Charles Perry for the opening of "The Duke of West Point" at the Aldine there.

To gain maximum interest in the promotion, Perry arranged the game between the Chester and Philadelphia teams, both top-flight members of the Eastern Hockey League, with members of the Ramblers, local professional team, acting as officials. Rivalry is strong between the two teams and the meeting was fully covered in local papers.

Two trophies were presented in the name of Edward Small, one going to the winning team and the other awarded to the individual high scorer with the game advertised in advance as for these "Duke of West Point" cups. Reduced tickets for the game were offered in advance at the Arena and downtown centers as a means of bolstering the attendance.

Appropriate military touch tying in with the picture was given to the event through the cooperation of the Betsy Ross Girls' Drum and Bugle Corps. Prior to the game the picture was screened for members of the two teams, as well as the Philadelphia sports writers, motion picture critics and radio commentators.

Lawson Robertson, track coach of the American Olympic team and of the University of Pennsylvania, acted as master of ceremonies at the screening and game. Posters and banners were placed at strategic places in the arena calling attention to the hockey game and picture for a week prior to the film's opening.

Dummy Camera Exploits "Too Hot to Handle"

Steve Fitzgerald, Grove Theatre, Chicago as an advantage on "Too Hot to Handle" sent usher out with dummy wooden camera on legs. Standing on busy street corners, lad waited until a sufficient crowd had gathered and then unfurled a banner with copy on the picture and playdates.

Envelopes were distributed on front of which appeared the title and inside was small sheet with stencil copy on the picture. Transparency was placed on footlights with red lamps in same, this was lit up during showing of the trailer, and attraction board was covered with red crepe paper so that the stars' name and title were in red.

Hosiery Tieups Made On Warner Pictures

National tieup on "Wings of the Navy" and "Yes, My Darling Daughter" has been effected by Warner Bros. with Artplus Hosiery, a national campaign being scheduled by the hosiery company including ads in class magazines. Mats and counter cards will be distributed to dealers and exhibitors throughout the country. Supplementing the campaign will be a window display contest for "Yes, my Darling Daughter."

THE 1939 AWARDS

In answer to those Round Tablers who ask more immediate information on the 1939 Quigley Awards, the new setup in brief is as follows:

So as not to conflict with the windup of the 1938 Competitions, the 1939 Awards will start on February 1.

The 1939 Awards will again be judged on a quarterly basis with the exception of the first period, which will run from February 1 to March 30.

The most important change is that the 1939 Competitions will be judged on a basis of single ideas or promotions and not on campaigns put over during the three-month Quarters, as in 1938. The single idea or promotion may be an unusual window display, contest, newspaper ad or series of ads, page one publicity break, street stunt, lobby or front decoration, etc., etc., and etc.

Preliminary winners will be voted every two weeks during each Quarter. Winners of the Quarterly Awards will be selected from among these preliminary winners and the Grand Awards voted from among the Quarterly winners.

Classifications are out. Everyone starts from scratch. From now on, it's "what you do, not where you are". The 1939 Awards go for the most unusual showmanship, whether it comes from the tiniest hamlet or the biggest city, the last-run neighborhood or the de luxe first-run.

More on the 1939 Awards in following issues.

World Broadcast On 'Beachcomber'

Motion picture talent and radio were welded January 1 in an unusual radio broadcast which was heard throughout the world. Paramount arranged the broadcast with the RCA Magic Key Program featuring a sketch from "The Beachcomber" in which Charles Laughton and Elsa Lanchester, the stars, both participated from different countries.

Laughton performed his role from a British station in London, while Miss Lanchester in New York to attend the premiere at the Rivoli, faced the NBC microphone here. Program was heard from New York to Honolulu and all over the world via short wave broadcast picking up different corners of the world for special New Year greetings from NBC.

Among the other outstanding highlights featured on the program were Kirsten Flagstad, Olsen and Johnson, Walter Damrosch and symphony orchestra, Walter Hampden, et al.

"Heart" Radio Contest Promoted by Pollock

Station WSAY cooperated with Les Pollock, Loew's, Rochester, N. Y., using a radio contest with the novelization of "Young in Heart," guest tickets being awarded to those submitting the best letters giving reasons on why they would like to see the picture. Contest which was planted a week ahead of opening is reported to have been highly successful. Same station also tied in on a curbstone quiz broadcast staged in front of theatre with public address system carrying voices to surrounding throngs.

"Young in Heart" charms were distributed through telegraph boys at busy street intersections, picture copy attached to the charms. Tieup stills mounted on cards with suitable lettering were placed in bookstores, libraries, cosmetic counters, etc., etc. Taxi bumper signs were used, heralds distributed through Liberty boys in a house-to-house canvass and transcription was planted four times in advance of opening over Stations WHEC and WSAY.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

"If I Were King" Script Used for Lobby Display

William F. O'Connell, manager of the Warner Highland Theatre, Chicago contacted the Paramount Studios for a script of "If I Were King" which was then used as lobby display with appropriate copy, after run, being donated to one of the local dramatic clubs.

Study charts were also displayed in lobby and store windows in the neighborhood. Publishing company was contacted for back numbers of their magazine containing ads on the picture. These were sniped with theatre name and playdates and then distributed in lobby.

Through the cooperation of local drug store, all mirrors carried cards reading "If I were king, I would eat at," etc, etc. Church ministers were circularized as were school principals, requesting that the picture be drawn to the attention of their respective flocks and children.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

Jamboree Ushers In "Scouts to the Rescue"

Boy Scout jamboree was promoted by Sam Warshauer, manager of the Pelham Theatre, Bronx, to herald the opening of "Scouts to the Rescue." Scouts paraded through the Bronx with canvas banners and buglers proclaiming the start of the serial.

In front of theatre, scouts were stationed, demonstrating various drills and flag-waving signals. Colors were presented and scout oaths given from the stage after which entire audience stood and joined in the singing of the national anthem.

Bell Lands Artist For Lobby Studio

Loew publicist Ray Bell said it with color in one of his promotions for "Sweethearts" at Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington. Week prior to the opening, Bell engaged a locally well-known artist who improvised a studio in the lobby of the theatre to paint portraits of MacDonald and Eddy.

Following completion of the portraits, arrangements were made with the Washington Daily News for a six day contest in which the film's highly developed technicolor was stressed and readers were asked to state whether they preferred color to black and white and why. Best letter sent in by female reader was awarded portrait of Nelson Eddy and best letter by male entrant was awarded the painting of Eddy.

In addition to interest created by the artist working in his lobby studio and the newspaper space garnered by contest, this promotion stressed an important phase of the film—the beauty of color which added to the interest in the picture.

Moss Traps Customers For "Brother Rat"

For "Brother Rat" at the Fox Carmel Theatre, Hollywood, Manager Dick Moss created a laugh-provoking lobby display consisting of a cage with mouse trap in it and display piece on the picture caught in the trap. Card on outside of cage read "We set a trap and caught the biggest laugh hit of the year," etc., etc.

Other of Moss' activities included an old fashioned cuckoo clock which heralded the opening of "Room Service." Card read "If you think this is a cuckoo, wait till you see" etc. Marx Brothers nut sundae was featured at local drug store and apartment hotel managers in the neighborhood informed their guests about the picture.

JOHN EXHIBITOR has been taken to task—and frequently—by well-meaning but misguided industry Messiahs for his failure to apply sufficient selling effort to his short subjects.

Given exploitation support comparable to features, shorts, they argue, would develop increased boxoffice returns, thus making possible a general improvement in the quality of short project. All of which means that any responsibility for mediocrity in short product is placed at the exhibitor's door.

One notable dissenter to this prevailing line of reasoning is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who finds the exhibitor not guilty as charged and the accusation as presented faulty.

To begin with, Metro believes that it is the producer who must be held accountable for any inferiority in short product, that larger boxoffice returns cannot be expected until the exhibitor is given better-produced and more intelligent shorts with which to work and, finally, that the producer himself must first apply showmanship to shorts befor it can be expected of the exhibitor.

Company Defends Exhibitor

What is more to the point, Metro refuses to condemn the exhibitor for laxity in shorts merchandising. Rather do they approve in principle the exhibitor's good judgment in not over-emphasizing his shorts, feeling that high-pressure selling campaigns in behalf of shorts too often are done at the expense of the feature attraction.

There is no denying the fact that the drawing power of any given program will always be determined chiefly by the feature. It is also true, however, that good shorts, properly publicized, can and do contribute a certain extra percentage to the total patronage. Therefore, Metro does advocate the selling of shorts—but as an integral part of the complete show.

With their final escape from the stigma of slapstick and their increasing use of informative or educational material, it is Metro's contention that probably seven out of ten shorts today will be found to possess special group appeal which, with a minimum of effort on the exhibitor's part, can be turned to direct boxoffice account. There have been cases where a single telephone call to a leader in some particular group or organization has resulted in members turning up in droves at the boxoffice for the sole purpose of viewing a ten-minute short on a subject of special interest to them.

Cites Pete Smith Examples

It is because dog lovers as a class are so numerous and so devoted to their hobby that Metro has seen fit to release five Pete Smith dog subjects in the past two and one half years. The boxoffice advantage of shorts offering specific group appeal has been the determining factor in the selection of the majority of Smith's material, such as his Prudence Penny pictures, his subjects on the candid camera craze, archery, bowling, etc. Similarly, the present widespread interest in various phases of psychic phenomena was responsible for the launching of Carey Wilson's "What Do You Think?" pictures. Subject matter of other shorts may be of civic, scientific, historical or sociological nature but in all cases it remains for the alert exhibitor to bring them to the attention of the group concerned.

Aside from their possible group appeal, Metro believes that the factual or documentary treatment of the new type of short frequently endows them with more exploitation opportunities than are offered by the accompanying feature.

For this reason Metro maintains that every showman worthy of the name will automatically appraise the boxoffice potentialities of his complete program so as to utilize any special selling angles presented by his shorts as a means of supplementing his feature campaign and gaining added publicity for the show as a whole.

Metro does have one decided criticism in the matter of shorts merchandising which is reserved for those few exhibitors who continue to conceal this part of their program under the time-worn stock phrase, "Also selected shorts".

The only major producer with a special department devoted to the promotion of shorts on a national basis, Metro feels justified in the complaint that any advance interest created by their publicity efforts is entirely dissipated when the exhibitor fails to at least identify his shorts. And with shorts now receiving twice as much attention in newspapers and magazines as they did a year ago, it seems reasonable to agree with Metro's conviction that surely somebody must be interested in shorts!

Tops in Entertainment

Novelty gag was conceived by Robert Busch, Oklan Square Theatre, Chicago to aid in the exploitation of "Valley of the Giants." To each patron leaving theatre in advance of opening, envelopes were distributed each of which contained a miniature top. Copy on envelope read "The tops in entertainment," followed by title, playdates.

Kid Bicycle Club Started by Taylor

Reported as one of the best good-will builders ever conceived by W. C. Taylor, manager of the Texas and Ritz Theatres, in Hillsboro, Texas, is his newly organized "Bicycle Safety Club." Through cooperation of school officials, bicycle racks have been placed in schools, safety reels secured from the State and these together with comedy shorts form the nucleus of Taylor's Saturday shows. The Mayor, city police officials and principal of the local school system have addressed the children each week.

With his first meeting held on December 3, there were about 250 members present, second meeting jumping to 318, with a further anticipated rise in attendance as the club gets under way. Dubbing it the THM Club (thoughtful, helpful and mindful), Taylor distributes buttons to each member who in turn must sign a pledge card, agreeing to live up to all the safety rules.

Club is limited to boys and girls ranging in age from six to sixteen and club was launched with a monster parade of bannered bicycles headed by Taylor with police escort.

V. M. I. Alumni Aid "Brother Rat" Date

Personal letters were mailed to all V.M.I. alumni residing in Charleston, West Va., by Manager R. E. England as part of his advance exploitation on "Brother Rat" at the Virginian Theatre, and urging them to attend the opening. Also staged was a special parade a day ahead, using the Charleston high school band in their cadet uniforms with police escort and headed by the Virginian personnel wearing the "Brother Rat" caps and service uniforms carrying a six-sheet cutout with dates on either side.

Special lobby display was constructed, cards tacked to stair risers, tieups effected with leading department stores on the "Brother Rat" dolls, with special window displays of stills, and numerous other merchants came through with effective windows.

License Numbers Mean Guest Tickets

Johnny McManus, Loew's Midland Theatre, Kansas City, Mo. effected a tieup with the Journal whereby each day police sargeant presented to paper the license number of the car driver whom he considered the most careful one of the day. Paper listed the number together with name and address of the winner, who upon identification was awarded guest tickets.

"LET'S HEAR FROM YOU"

"Boys Town" Co-op Page

JAMES W. GRANTHAM
who owns and manages the New Baxter Theatre in Baxter Springs, Kansas, had a very good reason for entering showbusiness. It seems he owned the lot where the theatre stands and after having a couple of buildings there decided to build a DeLuxe house and so nine years ago up went the New Baxter. This was leased to Fox and others but finally, in 1935, Jim, himself, took over and is right proud of the way the theatre is going over, undoubtedly due to his efforts, say we.

MOE WEISS
manages the Parkside Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., one of the houses of Century Circuit. An usher's job at the Roxy in New York City, was his starting point and from there he went to work for Randforce as assistant manager, which soon developed into a managerial post. His next move was to his present circuit as house manager and then was promoted to manager. Let's hear from you often, Moe and a personal visit from you will not be amiss since you are so close to Round Table headquarters.

came by his job as manager of the Cliftona Theatre in Circleville, Ohio, after being trained for it by Mr. E. Briner, owner of the house. We hope to hear from you soon and often, Dick.

Acting in the same capacity, he was transferred to the Cameo and State, then became house manager of the Riviera. He resigned from there and went into theatrical advertising and publicity, handling ads and publicity for 15 Rochester theatres as well as several out-of-town accounts in newspapers. He left there recently for his present situations.

FILM "BICYCLING" IS ON INCREASE, SAYS BUREAU

"Unauthorized Hold-overs" Outnumbered Two to One, Report Shows; New Exhibitors Factors

"Bicycling" violations outnumber "unauthorized hold-over" violations two to one, according to the annual report of the Copyright Protection Bureau for the year ended Oct. 31, 1938. The report was submitted this week to the large distributors, for which the Bureau functions in running down unauthorized exhibitions, under the operating supervision of Gabriel L. Hess, Hays office lawyer.

"This is apparently a return to the predominance of 'bicycling' which existed for a few years after 1927 when the distributors organized the Bureau," said a statement from Jack H. Levin, director of the Bureau. "Thereafter, and until 1936-37," he continued, "there were more violations of the hold-over type.

"Violations were found in only 16.75 per cent of the theatres investigated during the current year," said Mr. Levin, "as compared with 44.6 per cent during such years as 1930 and 1937, although there was a slight increase from the percentage of 12.03 for the year 1937. The activities of the Bureau centered in 34 states during the current year.

Three Factors Cited

"This new predominance of bicycling," said the report, "presumably lies in (1) an influx of new exhibitors, (2) the acquisition of one or more additional theatres by exhiitors previously operating single units or small circuits, and (3) the increase in the number of theatres operating in the United States by several thousand since 1935."

The report also discusses investigations of showings under non-theatrical auspices, and the cooperation secured both from the adjutant general of the War Department and from the commandant of the United States Coast Guard Service in respect of preventing unauthorized exhibitions at CCC Camps and Coast Guard units.

The Bureau cooperated with exhibitor organizations and individual exhibitors in a number of states who sought its aid in respect of "free shows," although, upon investigation, said Mr. Levin, it was generally found that such shows were given by means by 16 mm. prints of motion pictures which did not belong to the major distributors maintaining the Bureau. A special investigation of the illicit distribution of duped and bootleg prints was reported as still pending.

"Vital Law" Established

The report of Mr. Hess discusses a number of opinions handed down by the higher federal courts in the past year in which "vital law" was established for the exhibition right under copyright, dwelling particularly upon Patterson v. Century Productions, in which the supreme court of the United States refused last March to review a decision of the circuit court of appeals for the second circuit upholding under the doctrine of unauthorized "copying," and exhibition right for a copyrighted non-photoplay travelogue film.

Mr. Hess said:

"One of the basic problems confronting distributors of copyrighted motion pictures in respect of unauthorized exhibitions disclosed by the Copyright Protection Bureau, and indeed a problem upon which is based the entire structure of distribution in the industry as at present constituted, has been to secure the satisfactory judicial interpretation of the present Copyright Law so as to include an exclusive right to control the exhibition of copyrighted motion pictures. It took nine years, since I first commenced infringement actions of this nature in the various district courts of the United States, before a wholly complete and satisfactory solution was reached during the current fiscal year in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (N. Y., N. J. and Conn.) in the case of Patterson v. Century Productions (C. C. A. 2, 12/6/37), 93 F. 2d 489, affg. (S. D. N. Y. 1937) 19 F. Supp. 30. A petition for a writ of certiorari was denied by the supreme court of the United States (1938) 303 U. S. 655, 58 Sup. Ct. 759."

McGuire Installs Officers Of Projection Society

On Monday, the following officers of the American Projection Society were installed by P. A. McGuire, of International Projector Corporation: Edward McD. Bendheim, president; Alfred R. T. Bishop, vice-president; Frank McMahon, secretary; James Ambrosio, treasurer, and Jack Chulchian, sergeant-at-arms. The board of governors consists of Ed Ferris, Ed Levene, Fred Smith, Alex Polin and Tony Rugino. The society was founded in 1914 and chartered in 1915.

As honorary member of the society, Mr. McGuire installed its officers for the sixth year. W. Byrne, who has served as president for five years, expressed regret that his duties as business agent for local 306 made it difficult for him to continue as an active agent of the organization. President Bendheim, in his address, pointed out that it was just as important today as it was 25 years ago for the projectionist to be progressive.

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1938-39 season. Asterisk (*) after title of feature denotes first appearance of picture in Release Chart.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures announced by the home offices of the distributing companies.

When a production is reviewed in Hollywood, the running time is as officially given by the West Coast studio of the company at the time of the review, and this fact is denoted by an asterisk (*) immediately preceding the number. As soon as the home office has established the running time for national release, any change from the studio figure is made and the asterisk is removed.

Running times are subject to change according to local conditions. State or city censorship deletions may cause variations from the announced and published figures; repairs to the film may be another reason.

"DEUCES WILD"

NEVER before in the development of the motion picture has there been so much and so pungently opinionated discussion of what the screen ought to say as now obtains. The public prints are full of it and the air is thick with "movements" and special organizations which propose to impregnate the screen with significance, to laden it with vital meanings, to make it a social and political force.

It seems that the very processes by which the organized screen has sought to keep out of controversy are precipitating controversy.

Many and diverse contingents do not want to permit Hollywood to attend to its own business.

The motion picture "industry" is the show business, created and operated by showmen. These showmen are not and do not profess to be, educators, political leaders, economists, preachers of causes. They want to make money and enjoy success by attending to their business, the purveying of entertainment.

It is more than possible that the pother in print, making so much complaint, is not taking its origins from the whole public.

Certain relevant significances might be found in an exploration of the reading tastes of the United States, embodied in reports of a poll just announced by Dr. George Gallup of the American Institute of Public Opinion, which has done so competent a job in various kindred inquiries.

Let us look at the list of America's favorite literature: the Bible, "Gone with the Wind," "Anthony Adverse," "The Citadel," "How to Win Friends and Influence People," "The Good Earth," "Ben Hur," "Northwest Passage," "Little Women," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Les Miserables," "The Magnificent Obsession," "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer," "Treasure Island," "The Count of Monte Cristo," "Robinson Crusoe," "Ivanhoe," "The Green Light," "David Copperfield," and "The Call of the Wild."

IF that array of titles represents the customers for the printed word, what does it indicate? Certainly not much in the direction of the material, subjects and treatments that are demanded by the special pleaders who would make the motion picture theatre a house of controversy. And this was, mind you, a poll of readers, not mere lookers. The readers might be expected to be considerably more interested in the argumentative, the causes and movements, than those who prefer to sit and listen, at the radio, or sit and look, at the screen. The readers and lookers of the sit-and-take-it category, overlap in the middle but they are diverse indeed at both ends of the scale. The motion picture has been, is, made for the sit-and-take-its. They have made it by buying it.

Even Hollywood is far from clear about this. Most of what is heard from Hollywood is from its employed word-mongers, who would find their chores easier if they had the simpler, easier, and maybe more interesting job of addressing minorities instead of the majorities. The fact is that finding the game a bit difficult at times they would like to change the rules. Usually, you will be remembering, it is the losers who demand a new deck, demand a round of seven card stud with deuces wild and one-eyed jacks good in flushes. It gives the game the leaping jitters, but they hope to change their luck by the process of eliminating the laws and the skill.

In a recent outgiving Mr. Frank Capra has been much quoted from the Left, with much misinference, in his saying: " . . . the truly great pictures that the world is waiting for . . . will come as soon as pictures have something to say along with their invaluable power to entertain . . ." In the Leftist quoting there is much implication that there are forces calculated to keep the motion picture from "saying something."

In that connection one might look over Dr. Gallup's list again and seek to discover there evidence of broad demand to have the screen say anything which it can not now say.

Mr. Capra has observed: "Entertainment has been the primary function of the screen because pictures cost so much."

What that breaks down to is that as currently constituted the medium is so expensive that it has to get the patronage of majorities. As international merchandise that has meant world majorities.

THE motion picture industry has made arrangements to attune itself to majorities, including such arrangements as the Production Code and its Administration, which, nonetheless, gets at the hands of the word-mongers treatment which would make it appear external.

In the December 31 issue of The Saturday Review of Literature Mr. Ben Ray Redman, primarily a writer but who has recently completed a two year sojourn in the production community of Hollywood, observes:

"Nowhere in the Code do we read: 'Thou shalt not offend anyone, anywhere, at any time.' Yet this is filmland's first commandment and the greatest of all."

"And it comes," continues Mr. Redman, "from the men upon whom the responsibility for picture censorship really rests; the men who make the movies—not the subordinate producers, directors and writers, but the heads of production, the studio bosses."

Returning to Mr. Capra's piece, we do not find him considering the state of conditions such a handicap. He says: "Fortunate is the man who can both entertain and 'say something' in a picture. I have been trying to do just that, with varying degrees of success. Whenever I have succeeded in combining both, the results have been very gratifying. . . . In the future, when real writers and directors will turn to the screen as their great medium of expression, pictures will be infinitely superior to those we see today."

Apparently Mr. Capra considers that real skill can prevail, without changing the rules.

READERS AND LOOKERS

THE student of the American scene can spend a whimsically instructive quarter hour over the proofs of the national magazine copy of Mr. Barret McCormick's extensive and intensive campaign for "Gunga Din."

Mr. McCormick's zeal for the practise of his profession is such that he has prepared separate and special copy for

This Week

Thumbs Down

Motion picture distributors are rewriting their proposals for trade practice revision, on demand of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The program, as it stood before the revision began, was rejected again this week by the leaders of Allied States Association, meeting at the Carlton hotel in conjunction with a "Founders' Dinner" Tuesday night.

Developments are on page 13.

Leni Riefenstahl Sails

Leni Riefenstahl, former actress, at present occupying a high post in Nazi filmdom, returned to Germany Wednesday afternoon on the North German Lloyd liner Hansa after a visit in New York and Hollywood, where it was generally conceded she received the well known "cold shoulder," socially and professionally. Before sailing she invited both the trade and news press to an interview aboard ship, during which she said that she got what she expected from Hollywood film producers, but that the "better class" of people out there treated her well; that she liked America, and particularly the California scenery; that she regretted that her inability to market her Nazi film on the 1936 Olympics was deprivation for the American people, "sportsmen all"; that she thought some of the newspapers had given too much space to the socalled boycott against her in Hollywood, because she really had asked for no invitations to the studios; and, finally, that she would return to this country as soon as she could. All the foregoing was expressed after counsel with, and with interpolations from an interpreter.

each of a long array of publications with a consequence that the proofs display interesting judgments of shades of variation in magazine audiences.

For example there's an obvious assumption that many persons actually read the pages of the "Saturday Evening Post," whereas they are suspected of cantering through "Life," galloping through "Look," inhaling sex in "Liberty" and feeling hemanish with action, and just a wee touch of osculation, in "Colliers," while "Photoplay" draws pretty-boy-soldier glamour, not completely forgetting the kiss item.

Three months of labor and $200,000 have gone into the process of spreading tidings of "Gunga Din," including six twenty-four sheets which are stills from the show.

Lincoln Film

"Abe Lincoln of Illinois," one of the outstanding Broadway stage hits of recent seasons, will become a motion picture, with Raymond Massey, the "Abe" of the stage, repeating his part in the film, along with all of the cast of the play.

Production will be by Playwrights Producing Company, producers of Broadway plays, including "Lincoln," and headed by Robert E. Sherwood, author of the play. Associated with him in the company are Elmer Rice, Maxwell Anderson, Sam Behrman and Sidney Howard. They will start in the Spring, at the Eastern Service Studios, Astoria, Long Island, shooting nightly between their nightly stage appearances at the Plymouth theatre.

Playwrights Producing is said to have been offered as high as $275,000 for screen rights to "Lincoln."

The story of Abraham Lincoln was first filmed in feature form by Al and Ray Rockett for First National, in 1924, with George A. Billings as "Abe," a silent, and was followed in 1930 by another, produced by Joseph M. Schenck, for United Artists, a talker. There have been numerous "Abe Lincoln" shorts down through the years, running up to last week's release of "Abe Lincoln in the White House," by Warners, in their "Americanization" film movement.

Hollywood Tribute

Guest of honor Wednesday at the Ambassador hotel, Los Angeles, at a luncheon attended by top production executives, James Roosevelt, vice-president of Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., was paid high tribute by Joseph M. Schenck, Jack L. Warner, Samuel Goldwyn, Louis B. Mayer, Bishop W. Bertrand Stevens, and J. F. T. O'Connor, former comptroller of the currency and host for the occasion. After hearing plaudits such as never before have marked the entry of a young man into the motion picture business, Mr. Roosevelt thanked his admirers and read a prepared statement in which he categorically denied rumors and reports that his association with films had anything to do with the Government's suit in equity against the industry.

Mr. Schenck described the President's son as "a young man of truth, courage and honesty who will make splendid contributions to the industry." Mr. Warner promised cooperation to Mr. Roosevelt in learning the business. Mr. Goldwyn, the novice's immediate superior, said he was "a guaranty" that "American films shall maintain the high rank they now enjoy." Mr. Mayer praised Mr. Goldwyn for his foresight in employing Mr. Roosevelt and said, "I am confident he will contribute much to our industry and I know we all will take great satisfaction in what you accomplish in the years to come." Bishop Stevens and Mr. O'Connor also praised the young man.

Quiz Winners Feb. 20

February 20th, a Monday, a day generally conceded to be poor at the box office, has been chosen as the date for announcing winners in the $250,000 Movie Quiz contest. Exhibitors who paid campaign pledges will be informed at 8:00 P.M. that night of the names of the 5,404 winners. The reason advanced for the secrecy surrounding winners' identity up to that time, and for the refusal to disclose now the method of transmitting to theatres operator such information, is to afford all participating exhibitors an equal opportunity to use the announcement to build business.

Counting of the contest answers will take another week. The estimated total received, counted and uncounted, is above 2,000,000.

Another contest, asking for the best campaigns by theatre men on the drive, will end on January 31st. This offers three sets of prizes: those for cities of 100,000 or more, or 15,000 to 100,000, and of less than 15,000. Prizes are the same in each category: $500, first; $100, second; $50, third; $25, fourth, and $25, fifth. Judges are Will Hays, Martin Quigley, Jack Alicote, Maurice Kann, Charles E. Lewis, Jay Emanuel, and A-Mike Vogel.

Static

Trouble and threats of trouble, internal and inspired from without, face the radio industry, competitor of the screen in purveying mass entertainment. Immediate problems to be solved or eliminated include a possible talent strike by performers and announcers, a $5,000,000 federal tax levy, possible federal censorship, and the possibility that some method of Government regulation other than those means now employed will evolve from the present Congressional investigation of the industry.

Commendation

Manuel Pena Rodriguez, film editor of La Nacion, Buenos Aires, who was in New York this week on an annual visit, warmly commended American motion picture companies for their interest in Latin America and especially for their sponsoring the production of Spanish language films.

Mr. Rodriguez left New York for Hollywood, where he will write special articles for La Nacion. He said that the increase in Argentine production has caused a considerable increase in film costs. An average film cost $35,000 or $40,000 four years ago, but today is budgeted at about $100,000. The salary demands of talent also have increased, he said.

Attendance has risen as a result of the increased playing time given to Spanish language films, and film quality is improving, he said. The Monumental theatre in Buenos Aires shows Spanish language films exclusively, and so do virtually all the neighborhoods in the city.

Television

The National Broadcasting Company will spend $1,000,000 on television this year, for experiments and programs in New York, according to Niles Trammell, executive vice-president. The plans call for sending two hour programs over the New York transmitter, with additional transmitters to be set up in key cities if the public reaction is satisfactory.

Last Sunday NBC transmitted a variety show by television from apparatus mounted on a motor truck to the Restaurant Francais, in the building housing NBC's radio and television studios in Rockefeller Center.

On Monday Paramount and its television affiliate, DuMont Laboratories, began the first of a series of television experiments with a brief program of motion picture broadcasts. The program originated at the DuMont plant at Passaic, New Jersey, and was caught at receiving points up to a distance of 25 miles.

Odeon-GB Plans

The projected merger of Odeon's 250 theatres with Gaumont British's 350 houses may be effected next Spring. In association with others, the London banking company of Philip Hill plans $20,000,000 worth of public financing on behalf of Odeon in three or four months. Mr. Hill arrived in New York Tuesday on his way to Palm Beach, and while in Florida may have an opportunity to discuss the matter with Sidney Kent, president of Twentieth Century-Fox, and Nicholas Schenck, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer president.

Permission must be obtained from the two companies before the deal can go through, in that voting shares must be acquired in the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, holding company of GB, held by Isadore Ostrer, GB head, and his brothers. The Ostrers cannot sell without permission of MGM and Twentieth Century-Fox, which own a substantial part of GB.

Liquidation in Italy

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has liquidated its holdings in Italy, as have the other American companies affected by the ENIC decree effective December 31st, according to Ludovic Lawrence, MGM Continental European manager, who arrived Tuesday in New York on the Ile de France. MGM, Twentieth Century-Fox, Paramount and Warners each had from 10 to 12 branch offices in Italy, all of which have been closed. Mr. Lawrence will discuss the situation with Arthur Loew, MGM vice-president in charge of foreign activities.

Wage and Hours Law

Recommendations for amendment of the Wage and Hours Law to deal with employees in the motion picture and other industries who receive $100 or more in weekly salary, yet are not in professional or executive positions, will be made after completion of a study of the subject now going on, it was disclosed this week in Washington by Administrator Elmer F. Andrews in his first annual report to Congress. Mr. Andrews pointed out that while these employees are not affected by the wage provisions of the act they are covered by hour provisions and must be paid time and one-half for overtime employment. The administrator promised to present recommendations to Congress after the material now being gathered has been digested.

WPA Dismissals

Three-fourths of the 1,524 dismissals ordered by Federal relief officials in Washington for the five Works Progress Administration Federal arts projects were completed this week, according to Paul Edwards, head of the arts projects in New York. The remainder will be carried through within two weeks, in line with the Government's policy of giving two weeks' notice of dismissal.

The figures released by Mr. Edwards' office indicated that 861 persons, about 70 per cent of those to go, had already been dismissed from the theatre project; 109, all of those to be cut, from the writers' project; 27, the total, from historical records; 93, about 98 per cent, from the arts project, and 198, 99 per cent of those to go, from the music project.

A committee of seven persons known in the theatre flew to Washington this week with a petition against the cuts signed by 200,000.

"Fair" Project Fading

A previously anticipated "costly" concession, "The Making of a Motion Picture," at the San Francisco World's Fair, in all probability will not develop. With the opening of the Fair only a month away, on February 18th, and conditions still unsettled concerning the construction of such an exhibit, the management of the Golden Gate International Exposition said this week that the concession will not likely be found on the Treasure Island site of the Exposition in San Francisco Bay.

The only actual participation of the motion picture industry, then, in San Francisco's Fair will be through the contribution of a motion picture, a "Cavalcade of America," containing scenes of American history, culled from the vaults of the large companies, a duplicate of which will also be shown at New York's Fair, opening in April.

MPTOA WINS REWRITING OF TRADE PRACTICE PLAN; ALLIED ASKS MORE

Both Exhibitor Organizations Demand Clarification of Proposals; Allied Resolves to Continue Legislative Campaign

Self-regulation of distribution and exhibition, in the process of formulation since last August, has been postponed indefinitely, pending rewriting of the tentative draft by the distributors to conform to the request of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for clarification of phraseology, and to allow them to find a solution to Allied's virtually complete rejection of the first draft plus its demands for additional concessions. Even then, Allied says, it will not halt its campaign for relief by legislation and litigation directed at major distributors.

Committees Bargain

William F. Rodgers, of MGM, heading a committee of distributors, and Edward L. Kuykendall, chairman of the MPTOA's negotiating committee, met last week in New York to bargain on differences over concessions in the program, or lack of them. The prime result was the majors' agreement to clear the 16-plank document of the vagueness of its legal language; to devise a more definite cancellation clause, and to expend further efforts on local arbitration or conciliation board machinery for enforcing the program when enacted.

Renewing their demands on distributors for a satisfactory mechanism for arbitration, for the barring of acquisition of theatres by affiliated circuits, and numerous other changes in the majors' proposals, Allied's board of directors, meeting in Washington Tuesday, rejected the draft flatly, but instructed its negotiating committee to continue efforts to secure proposals from the distributors that will meet the board's requirements for a "complete and definite plan, including actual details of an arbitration system," all by March 1st. This was Allied's first formal organization expression on the program.

Regardless of the outcome, Allied resolved that, "No plan which may be reported shall in any way hinder or preclude Allied States from seeking a larger measure of relief than that offered by the distributors, by legislation, litigation or otherwise; and, further, that the (Allied) campaign of legislation and litigation be prosecuted unceasingly and with vigor." The organization's efforts in these directions have been pointed to the enactment of state laws for divorcing distributors from exhibition; Congressional laws abolishing block and blind selling, and attacks in the court based on claims of Federal anti-trust violation.

One stumbling block to the successful consummation of self-regulation is understood to be a difference of opinion among distributors' counsel on the legal status of arbitration as compared with conciliation.

Independent Units Also Seek Changes

Previous to its meeting with the MPTOA in New York, Mr. Rodgers' committee of distributor negotiators heard demands for revision of the tentative draft made by the various state units not affiliated either with the MPTOA or Allied. Continuing a procedure followed throughout all of the trade program conversations, details of the talks were not divulged, Mr. Rodgers, for his committee, explaining the situation in this instance as follows:

"The distributors' committee on trade practices met on Tuesday and Wednesday last, with committees representing the MPTOA of Virginia, Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York, Intermountain Theatres Association of Salt Lake City, Theatre Owners and Managers of the Rocky Mountain Region, of Denver, and the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California and Arizona, of Los Angeles.

"The results of these discussions were most encouraging to all sides. Details, however, must necessarily be withheld at this time as there are several matters unsettled, but we are hopeful that these can be overcome and once these few differences are taken care of it can be safely stated that both sides are most optimistic concerning the outcome."

COLE OF TEXAS HEADS ALLIED

Colonel H. A. Cole, Dallas, Allied States leader for years, was elected president Wednesday at the final session of the winter meeting of the board of directors in Washington. He succeeds Nathan Yamins.

Other officers elected or reelected were: Abram F. Myers, general counsel; Charles H. Olive, Washington, secretary; P. J. Wood, Columbus, recording secretary; H. A. Blum, Baltimore, treasurer, and Mr. Myers, Mr. Cole, W. A. Steffes, Sydney Samuelson, Nathan Yamins and Martin G. Smith, Toledo, executive committee.

The directors selected Minneapolis for Allied's 1939 convention, the date of which, probably around June 1st, will be decided later.

MPTOA Expects Clarification

Mr. Kuykendall's MPIOA negotiating committee concluded its "bargaining" conversations with Mr. Rodgers' distributor committee last Thursday afternoon at the Union League Club in New York. A statement by Mr. Rodgers in explanation was identical to that issued by him in the matter of the independents as above.

Mr. Kuykendall, however, gave a more detailed account of the conference, although he did not disclose the specific nature of certain "objectionable clauses," which, he said, will be eliminated from the majors' program. His statement follows:

"Our committee presented to the distributors' committee a coordinated analysis of the reaction of the various units in MPTOA's national organization. We feel that many of the objections found in the distributors' proposals as issued December 1, 1938, were based on misunderstandings of just what the language meant and many of these were ironed out. We of course still feel that there are certain trade adjustments that could be further relieved and we tried to present this to the distributors' committee in the most comprehensive way.

"It is our understanding that the distributor proposals will be completely rewritten and one or two objectionable clauses eliminated entirely. The concellation clause will be better understood. There is yet much to be done in the setting up of conciliation boards. It is naturally a rather intricate procedure because of the various interests involved, and in order that there be no mistake in their methods of procedure when they do start functioning.

"MPTOA's committee insists that whatever adjustments are made should be immediately effective and I feel that they will be consummated and made effective at the earliest possible date consistent with the importance of the things involved, and I am convinced that while there are still some important matters on which we are not in accord that we made great progress in this meeting. We do not anticipate another meeting will be held until after the distributors' committee with their lawyers rewrite the proposals that we may study them further.

"I urge everyone in the motion picture industry, both exhibitors and distributors, to give these trade practice adjustments their complete and wholehearted support that they may be made effective and fair at the earliest possible date in order that the exhibitors of this country may be benefited by them as soon as possible. Let's not allow petty and purely local issues to becloud the negotiations, because whatever benefits are derived for one exhibitor, will be equally effective for all. We are not seeking credits or playing politics. What we want are results and I invite helpful information and constructive criticism from any source whatsoever if it will tend to bring about an early agreement between all of those concerned."

Allied Dissatisfied, Will Try Again

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

Consideration of the trade practice situation was the major subject of discussion at the tenth annual meeting of the Allied States board, held behind closed doors at the Carlton Hotel, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Preliminary ground work for the board was laid Monday before the opening of the annual meeting, when members of the negotiating committee, composed of Nathan Yamins, president; Abram F. Myers, general counsel; W. A. Steffes, Ray Branch and Sidney Samuelson, with M. A. Rosenberg and Herman Blum as alternates, met with a delegation of producers consisting of William F. Rodgers, Gradwell L. Sears, Warners, and Abe Montague, Columbia, accompanied by H. I. Levinson and Tyree Dillard, attorneys, for a five-hour discussion of the proposals.

While the conferees emerged from the meeting apparently on friendly terms, there was no indication that the distributors and exhibitors saw eye to eye on any of the major matters with which the trade pact seeks to deal. That it was a very "friendly" conference was all that anyone would say, but that it had not led to any agreement was evident, and was demonstrated later when the full board met.

With the convening of the board meeting, Tuesday, the real work of the session began where the negotiating committee had left off the night before. Members of the board were acquainted with the details of the committee conference, and spent the day in discussion of the distributors' draft, paragraph by paragraph, calling Mr. Rodgers in for further negotiations, the lack of success of which were demonstrated

Reply to Walter Wanger's Plea for Propaganda on Screen

Martin Quigley presents answer to Hollywood producer, declaring exhibition's rights and screen's interests

IN a variety of expressions, of varying directness, Walter Wanger, producer, has been taking vehement exception to the long established stand of Martin Quigley, editor and publisher, on a policy of "entertainment only" for the screen, and meaning thereby specifically "no propaganda, no special pleading of causes." Mr. Wanger has in substance charged Mr. Quigley with a reactionary, suppressive attitude and purpose.

It has been curiously manifest in Mr. Wanger's outgivings and many other kindred expressions that his school of thought takes no cognizance of the motion picture exhibitor as the responsible publisher of screen expressions, no cognizance that to the public for which pictures are presumed to be made the theatre is the institution of the motion picture.

Mr. Quigley in the subjoined communication re-states the exhibitor's position, and re-affirms his concept of the proper and competent functions of the amusement screen. Along with that will be found a pointing to the consequences of a policy of controversy.

—THE EDITOR

Mr. Walter Wanger,
Hollywood, California
Dear Mr. Wanger:

It is unfortunate that before launching your recently published attack on my position against the use of the entertainment screen for political propaganda that you did not seek an intelligent understanding of what my position really is.

Had you done so you might still have found grounds for argument. But at least you would have been addressing yourself realistically to a condition that exists and not, as you have done, spent ardent blows upon a bugaboo created largely out of your imagination.

Some sixteen thousand exhibitors are subscribers to publications of which I am the editorial director. These exhibitors over a period of many years have come to rely upon these publications for honest and intelligent interpretation of industry problems.

These exhibitors are custodians of billions of dollars worth of properties, the operation of which costs millions of dollars annually.

When the security of these properties is actually imperiled, or when I think it is likely to be imperiled, it is both my right and my responsibility to speak out in opposition. This I have done against the efforts of those who would invade the entertainment screen with political propaganda. The political propagandists would enslave the screen, just as they have done in all of the totalitarian states. My efforts are for the preservation of the freedom of the screen.

It is my belief, which you seem more intent upon suppressing than disproving, that motion pictures of a political, controversial character, embracing support of any one of the three dominant political threats to the security of American institutions—Nazism, Fascism and Communism—would be commercially and strategically disastrous to the welfare of the industry.

Please note that I mention specifically the three principal alien ideologies. I do not beat around the bush or pussyfoot about any one of them. Whether one or the other is a little more or a little less virulent in its menace to American democracy is beside the point. They are—all three—bad.

All three stem, as I hope you will take the trouble to satisfy yourself, from the same root which consists of the false theory of the supremacy of the state over the individual and the accompanying denial of the natural, inalienable rights of man.

I have continued to insist for the past twenty-three years, in print and by spoken word, that the motion picture must be a medium free from every restriction save only those necessary for the welfare of the individual and the state.

To ignore these is not to buy more freedom but to receive less.

In the Production Code and accompanying arrangements I assisted in maintaining for the motion picture a freedom which it was on the verge of losing to some form of political censorship. This work assisted the industry in the discharge of its responsibility for the moral welfare of its patrons.

I hope and expect by the position I have taken against political propaganda in the entertainment film to assist the industry in a defense of its own best interests and at the same time to see avoided the possible use of the theatre screen for the propagation of ideas destructive to the ideals of the American state.

I have never asked for any restrictions upon the subject matter of the motion picture except those which involve its responsibility for decency and those which would preserve it from the inevitably unhappy fate that would result from its plunge into the forum of political debate.

If you cannot make pictures which satisfy the dictates of decency and also avoid mounting the political soapbox, the fault cannot logically be blamed on any unreasonable lack of latitude in the selection of subject matter.

Your recent record proves my case. You found for "Algiers" subject matter for a successful picture which did not involve indecency or politics. In "Blockade" which was not a successful picture you toyed with an international political issue. The result, in exhibitor opinion, was bad. You say this was due to organized and unorganized protests against it. Here you betray a lack of understanding of one of the very important considerations in this controversy.

Of course there were protests against it, organized and unorganized. Under the American system when people do not like something they have the right to protest in any orderly manner.

It should by now be exceedingly plain that any picture dealing in controversial manner with any of the political issues which today are plaguing the hearts and minds of men will split the theatre audiences into divided groups. It will not increase the size of the audience but tend to diminish it. The logical outcome of such a policy would be a public split into many groups, each group withholding its patronage from all pictures except those which especially cater to its ideas.

This of course does not happen under a Hitler. The public there takes, without audible complaint, what is given to them. But that is not the American way. There will be protests here against what is not liked as long as there is free speech and free press. If you make pictures of a partisan political character some part of our audiences will stay away from the theatres and probably seek to induce others to stay away. That is one reason why I do not want to see made pictures of a partisan, political character.

What you really are complaining about is not that there is not a free screen—because actually the screen is free—but rather because the public has not been dragooned into accepting what you think it ought to have.

And perhaps not having the courage of genuine convictions as to the character of subject matter about which you talk so vaguely, and not being willing to face the possible protests of an unregimented public, you try to make it appear that someone is preventing you from doing what you are perfectly free to do.

"Theatre is held responsible"

You know perfectly well that if you do not wish to accept the suggestions of the Production Code Administration as to either decency or policy considerations you are free to reject them.

Actually you are under no restraints other than those prescribed by the law of the land.

Why not, then, go ahead and make pictures just as you wish, or have I mistaken commercial ballyhoo for sincere discussion?

Relative to your professed purposes of propaganda you perhaps should be reminded that it is the exhibitor and not the producer who is in the position of strict and immediate accountability to the public.

As a producer of motion pictures you may envision yourself as the publisher of these subjects to the world. The producer as such has no means of revealing his picture to the public. That process is the function of the exhibitor. The producer submits his subject. The exhibitor decides whether or not it shall be published to his community.

The theatre is not in the status of a newsstand at which the public picks up a publication and looks beyond to the publisher for responsibility. The theatre is responsible for what it shows and it is so held by its public.

It therefore appears that in order to make successful your propaganda program it will be necessary to regiment also the exhibitors because among these as well as the public at large there is no unanimity as to political beliefs.

I am puzzled by your complaint that, "we do not have that something which enabled Orson Welles to electrify the nation with his 'War of the Worlds.'" Can it be possible that you are under an impression that you enjoy any right to merchandize fear—stark, terrible fear, created out of a deception that was made to seem true and did seem true to thousands of people?

If so, and if you now wish to imitate that broadcast which was immediately denounced by every responsible authority, then there are millions of people in this country who will hope that you are not representative of the conscience of Hollywood.

You remark on the exciting, vital films that came out of pre-Hitler Germany. In doing so you seem unmindful that you are using an argument against your position and not for it.

These films were made before the German film was debauched by political propaganda. The dullness of the current German films, which you also remark, is because the German film is now primarily a medium for political propaganda. Your declared policy is an invitation to what you profess to deplore.

When the artist muddies his perspective with political objectives he is enslaving and not freeing his medium.

Any art form needs of course to be attuned to the conditions of its day. The topics of the times frequently become themes of dramatic presentations. No sensible person I know of objects to this. The objection is based simply on the partisan use of the dramatic medium for the accomplishment of political objectives.

Perhaps you are not aware that the radio broadcasting interests, out of bitter experience, now maintain a regulation identical with the policy which I advocate for the motion picture industry. This regulation prohibits the use of the dramatic form for the presentation of political argument.

The obvious reason for this which applies equally to motion pictures is that the dramatic presentation of political argument would contribute not to clarity but to chaos in the public mind because the essential merits of the argument would be subordinated to the emotional appeal.

Let me remind you that there are grave dangers to the industry inherent in the policy you seem to advocate. It is not one that may safely be toyed with or experimented upon. The pictures which violated decency and brought down on the industry a storm of public protest were relatively few in number.

Only a few pictures of a propaganda character would be sufficient to embroil the industry in corresponding complications, out of which it would be fortunate indeed to escape as well as it did in the former emergency.

Very truly yours,
MARTIN QUIGLEY.

New York City,
January 18, 1939.

Gulf States Staging Refugees Benefit

Further aid from the motion picture industry for German non-Aryan refugees will be forthcoming January 26th as a result of the benefit to be held on that date throughout the Gulf States, comprising Louisiana, Mississippi and parts of Alabama and Florida. The day has been designated "Campaign for Humanity Day" with theatres turning over the entire day's receipts to a relief fund for European refugees. E. V. Richards is general chairman.

Supreme Court Decisions Due On Film Cases

by FRANCIS L. BURT
in Washington

Possibilities of Supreme Court decisions in the Texas anti-trust and ASCAP suits on January 30 were seen here this week as the court adjourned until that date after hearing arguments on the two cases.

Hearing the Dallas suit for the second time, the court again reviewed the issues involved in the Government's effort to outlaw license agreements under which the distributors were to require second and subsequent run houses to cease dual bills and adopt minimum admission scales.

Conspiracy Denied

Arguing for the defendants in the case, Judge Thomas D. Thacher denominated the Government's arguments as "purely fictitious" and asserted that the findings of facts and conclusions of law submitted by the Texas court in conformity with the high tribunal's orders did not substantiate the Department of Justice charges.

Joined with Judge Thacher as counsel for the defendants, George S. Wright, referring to the letters which Interstate Circuit wrote to the distributors concerning the minimum admission and double bill restrictions did not constitute a conspiracy simply because the letters were identical, and declared that the distributors acted independently in agreeing to the restrictions.

As in many recent cases, the question of monopoly was dragged into the Texas situation. Robert H. Jackson, solicitor general, appearing for the Government, asserted that the letter of Interstate Circuit inviting all the distributors to join in controlling the freedom of action of the following exhibitors was in itself an invitation to violate the law, the effect of the conspiracy alleged by the Government being to force the people into higher priced theatres and protect the monopoly of the Interstate and Texas Consolidated chains.

ASCAP Appeal Heard

Although the two American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers cases were appealed on the question whether the necessary sum of $3,000 required to give the Federal courts jurisdiction was involved, counsel arguing the suits took occasion to defend the Society against the charge that it is a combination in restraint of trade.

Arguing that the copyright control law of Florida is unconstitutional, Thomas G. Haight, attorney for the organization, declared it to be "only one of a series of attacks by those who wish to use copyrighted works without paying for them."

In arguing the Washington case, Mr. Haight was instructed by Chief Justice Hughes to confine himself to a discussion of jurisdiction, the issues being the same as in the Florida case, where the Society was successful in getting an injunction.

To that end, Mr. Haight explained the association assured $60,000 a year from users of copyrights in the state, and since the existing contracts run through 1940 it would lose that amount each year. Thus, he argued, the jurisdictional amount undoubtedly was involved. Further, he said, publishers may lose as much as $1,000,000 a year if the statute is upheld, so that the general interest requires the Supreme Court to define the constitutionality of such laws.

EXHIBITORS ASK PLAN CLARIFICATION

MPTOA URGES FILM RECORD OF U. S.

Before returning to his home in Mississippi from self-regulation negotiations with distributors in New York, Edward L. Kuykendall, MPTOA president, last Friday, urged exhibitors to cooperate with their Chambers of Commerce in securing from distributors strips of films from existing features "to help start and develop an historical record for every interested American city and town."

With Hollywood spending much of its $135,000,000 to $150,000,000 production budget in research and recreating scenes in early American life, Mr. Kuykendall said owners should "utilize this by-product to its full American advantage" by "salvaging pertinent material and helping Chambers keep an animated record of their town—a sort of chronology in film."

Typical subjects from which such strips could be obtained, he said, are "Wells Fargo," "St. Louis Blues," "Union Pacific," "I'm from Missouri," "In Old Chicago,"

"JESSE JAMES" TAKES $80,000

Twentieth Century-Fox proposes its new "Jesse James," story of dime-novel banditry, all in color, as the new year's box office performer to date, citing an $80,000 gross on its first week's showing at the Roxy in New York, where the top seven-day performer for all of last year was the $76,917 taken in by the company's own "Alexander's Ragtime Band," during the balmy, vacationist-visiting days of August, as against a ten-inch snowfall for last Friday's "Jesse James" opening day, the snowiest and blowiest day of the winter.

With the city only beginning to dig out, last Saturday, "Jesse" grossed $17,402. On the first Saturday of "Alexander's" exhibition, the gross was $15,947. One hundred and fifty thousand persons paid admissions to "Jesse James" in this first week, with the theatre management figuring on a four-week run. Only seven pictures before in all of the 12-year history of the house have run four weeks.

Allied to Press Legislative Drive

when, at the close of the session, Allied made public the report of its negotiating committee, signed unanimously by both members and alternates.

That report disclosed that the distributors' offer was no more acceptable than it had been when first presented at the Allied board Chicago meeting in November, that the association was determined not to retreat from its demand for satisfactory arbitration provisions, that it would continue negotiations in the hope of reaching a satisfactory settlement of the controversy, but that Allied would continue to work for legislation and Government anti-trust prosecutions coincidentally with and even after the negotiations if such action appeared to offer promise of achieving the ends at which it aims.

Differences Outlined

"The negotiating committee reports that it has received a written draft of proposals dated December 1st, with revisions dated January 14th, which are not materially different from the oral proposals outlined to the board of directors in Chicago on November 3rd," it was declared.

"The points of difference are clarifications of language, together with a wholly tentative outline of an arbitration set-up, not complete as to either principles or details.

"The distributors requested that counsel for Allied sit in with their counsel and endeavor to draft suitable declarations of principles and work out the arbitration rules and other details. The distributors also invited counsel for Allied to suggest clarification of certain other provisions of the proposals.

"The substance of the proposals remains as reported at Chicago and our committee has been informed that, so far as the substance is concerned the distributors are agreed that they have gone as far as they will go.

"The draft in its present form does not, in the opinion of your committee, meet the requirements of the resolution adopted at Chicago that it obtain from the distributors their complete plan, including the details of arbitration. The draft being incomplete in the particulars above mentioned, the committee does not feel that it can recommend that it be either accepted or rejected.

"In the circumstances, your committee recommends that it be authorized to continue its negotiations, directly and through counsel, to ascertain whether a complete and satisfactory plan of arbitration can be developed and the language of the other provisions satisfactorily clarified, and to make a full report to the board not later than March 1st, which shall contain definite recommendations for the acceptance or rejection of the program.

"We further recommend that, to avoid any possible misunderstanding, the board now reaffirm the stand taken in the Chicago resolution that nothing in any plan which may be submitted shall hamper or preclude Allied from seeking a larger measure of relief through prosecution of its program of legislation and litigation, and that such program be prosecuted unceasingly and with vigor.

"This is the unanimous report of your committee, joined in by the alternates."

Dinner Marks Anniversary

Marking the tenth anniversary of the founding of the association, the meeting was featured by a "Founders Dinner" Tuesday evening, in tribute to the exhibitors who signed the original articles of the organization in 1929. Several of the original group were unable to make the trip to Washington, but there were present W. A. Steffes, Herman A. Blum, Charles R. Casanave, H. M. Richey and Abram F. Myers, leading spirit in the formation of Allied and its general counsel for the past decade. Other guests included members of Congress who have been prominent in pushing the legislation which Allied has fought for, members of the association and their wives.

Mr. Richey, former Allied leader now with RKO, was toastmaster. Brief addresses were made by the founders and by Senator Matthew M. Neely of West Virginia, one of the guests of honor and sponsor of the Neely anti-blocking bill.

With the major subjects of interest—distributors' trade practice proposals—disposed of, but little business remained for the board's consideration Wednesday and the session was comparatively brief. A number of resolutions were adopted, two of which were made public following adjournment of the meeting, one dealing with the trade pact, the other with the Philadelphia first run situation.

Resolution Confirms Report

The resolution on trade practice proposals accepted and affirmed the report made Tuesday by the negotiating committee, reiterating that group's recommendation that the distributors' draft was not sufficiently definite or complete to enable the board to take final acceptance.

The negotiating committee was then authorized to continue efforts to secure proposals meeting the board's requirements.

"After a thorough study of the proposals submitted, and pre-supposing that legal and workable wording of such proposals may be evolved," the resolution said, "the board feels that such proposals fall far short of curing the industry evils of which Allied and the independent exhibitors have complained for years, and the board therefore reiterates its stand taken in its former resolution that nothing in any plan which shall be reported shall in any way hinder or preclude Allied States Association from seeking a larger measure of relief than that offered by the distributors, by legislation, litigation, or otherwise; and further, that the campaign of legislation and litigation be prosecuted unceasingly and with vigor."

In its resolution on the Philadelphia situation, Allied called on Twentieth Century-Fox and Chase National Bank, as controlling stockholders of National Theatres Corporation, and on its theatre company as owner of the Fox Theatre, to give "earnest consideration" to the advisability of leasing that theatre to an independent exhibitor upon expiration of the present lease to Warner Brothers, to break the monopoly in first-run theatres which Warner Brothers now have in Philadelphia."

Film Stock Trades Light

Disposition of 3,000 shares of Trans Lux Corporation common stock in October by H. P. Farrington, New York, director, was disclosed Thursday by the Securities and Exchange Commission at Washington in its semi-monthly summary. At the close of October, it was shown, Mr. Farrington held 5,000 shares of Trans Lux common.

The only other film transaction shown by the report was the acquisition in September of 2,000 shares of Universal Pictures common stock by Daniel M. Sheaffer, Philadelphia, director, through Universal Corp.

TALENT STRIKE, $5,000,000 TAX, NEW LAWS, PATENTS PROBE FACE RADIO

Screen and Stage Actors Decide to Support Federation of Radio Artists If Walkout Is Voted; Union's Proposals

A general talent strike of all radio performers and announcers, a $5,000,000 federal tax levy, federal censorship, and a federal investigation of patents control—these are the possibilities facing radio, competitor to the motion picture in mass entertainment.

Added to these troubles ahead is the current federal investigation of radio by the Federal Communications Commission, out of which many in Washington predict there is almost certain to come regulatory or other legislation in Congress, and as a result of which radio is striving to effect self-regulation and self-censorship on its own.

The FCC, through public hearings in Washington, has sought for weeks, and will continue its study for weeks to come, to determine the extent, if any, of radio "monopoly" and benefits enjoyed thereby in the large networks, also radio's corporate, operating or other relations with newspapers, communications companies, motion pictures and other amusements.

Screen, Stage Actors Vote Support If Strike Comes

Six thousand radio performers in the American Federation of Radio Artists are to vote whether to strike, by next Sunday. The strike call was issued by the organization's national board last Thursday, after its representatives had walked out of conferences with the "fact finding committee" of the American Association of Advertising Agencies. The committee had submitted to the radio performers a schedule of wages which they found "far too low."

"We got one fantastically low offer after a year of conferences, and we walked out on it, and we will stay out," declared Mrs. Emily Holt, executive secretary of the Federation.

Members of allied actors' unions in films, the stage, and vaudeville are rallying to the support of the radio artists in their fight.

Last Saturday, the American Federation of Actors passed a resolution offering "unqualified support"; on Monday, the Screen Actors Guild did the same, on the coast; also on Monday, the international board of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America voted support and sympathy; on Tuesday, the Actors Equity and Chorus Equity, meeting in New York, passed resolutions of cooperation.

Others Would Stay Off Radio

Most of these resolutions declare that if the AFRA does issue a strike call, no member of any of the other unions would appear on radio, thus shutting off all the sources of talent supply for sponsored shows on the air. Sustaining programs would not be affected. The networks made an agreement with those players five months ago.

The national board of the AFRA, which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, asked its members not to delay their votes beyond Sunday. The New York local was to vote Thursday morning at the Hotel Edison. The Chicago radio performers will vote Friday. Los Angeles will vote Saturday and San Francisco on Sunday.

"NOISELESS RADIO" EXPECTED BY SPRING

Major Edwin H. Armstrong, inventor of many radio devices and at present a professor of electrical engineering at Columbia University, will place in operation in the spring his short wave station at Alpine, N. J., which, he claims, will "revolutionize" radio transmission and reception by eliminating all interference noise, including static, and make possible the use of short wave transmission within this country on a commercial scale.

The station will relay the programs of the New York area high-fidelity station, WQXR, owned and operated by radio engineer John L. Hogan, who already has filed a petition with the Federal Communications Commission to erect a station in New York City using the Armstrong system, which is described as a frequency modulated transmission system, as opposed to the amplitude modulating systems now in use. There are three transmitting stations on the Armstrong plan, now being used experimentally at Yonkers and Albany, N. Y., and Storrs, Conn. Six more in the east are under construction.

The board also instructed its membership not to sign any employment contracts without the approval of the executive secretary and unless the contracts, if made, contained a provision to render them void in time of strike, unless the agency or sponsor is a signatory to the AFRA code.

The AFRA has been conferring since last January with the advertising agencies' representatives, the purpose being to standardize conditions and establish equitable wages.

What the Union Asks

The union asks a basic wage of $15 for actors and announcers on 15-minute programs, $25 for half-hour programs, and $35 for one-hour programs. They ask also a rehearsal pay rate of $6 an hour.

The AFRA's national board announcement stated that "conditions have arisen in the field of commercial radio broadcasting which make it imperative that members of the AFRA refrain from working for advertising agencies and producers who fail to become signatories to the AFRA's code of fair practice."

Mrs. Holt said that sponsored broadcasts over the three great networks definitely would be affected, in event of strike. John Benson, president of the AAAA, pointed out that many performers on network programs were under contract; that the union could not break these contracts by ordering its members on strike.

Bearing indirectly on the situation is a change made recently in the provision of the agreement between the networks and the AFRA governing announcer charges for programs of New York derivation.

The clause in the contract covered the possibility that an agency might fail to deliver a program, with the provision that the network could build a program not to exceed twice the gross facilities charge. This clause has been changed to allow the network to build a program, but the cost must not be more than one-half of the gross facilities charge.

Capital Talks of Radio Tax of $5,000,000

In Washington, observers for the radio chains fear that Administration circles mean to make the radio industry, and especially the broadcasting networks, pay a part of the $432,000,000 in taxes called for by President Roosevelt. $5,000,000 is reported to be the figure likely to be demanded of the radio chains.

There are now no special taxes on radio, such as the 10 per cent federal levy and numerous state and local levies on films and theatre admissions.

These observers say nothing will be done until the federal income tax returns are in.

The arguments of the broadcasters that they already pay income taxes are countered by tax-seeking Congressmen with the assertion that others who use Government facilities also pay income taxes, and pay in addition the charge for the use of those facilities.

The new taxes, if suggested and adopted, probably will take the form of wattage fees, with safeguards against excessive taxation of those stations with very large wattages.

Congress Asked to Censor Radio

Also in Washington the radio industry fears a new attack in Congress. The latest effusion is a bill reintroduced by Senator Schwellenbach and referred to the Committee of Commerce. The measure, which failed in the last Congress, provides for the removal from the broadcasting companies of the right of control over subjects of a controversial nature; for certain periods of time over the air during which would take place "uncensored discussion, on a non-profit basis, of social, political, and economic problems, and for education purposes." The bill provides, in this respect, that in controversial debates both sides be given equal time. The bill further requires complete recordings of applications for radio time, and the reasons for rejections and for changes in those programs devoted to public discussion. Finally, it asks limitation of government censorship to those cases in which obscene or defamatory language is used.

Probe of Patents in Radio Is Underway

Also on the Washington scene continues the investigation by the Temporary National Economic Committee into charges of monopoly in the radio industry. This week the patent situation was salient, with Philo T. Farnsworth, vice-president of Farnsworth Television, Inc., Frank B. Jewitt, president of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, and William D. Coolidge, director of the General Electric Company's research laboratory, among those scheduled for questioning. These men are expected to outline their experience with the patent system and give the TNEC information as to how patents are acquired, controlled and used in the major industries. The purpose of the investigation is purportedly to ascertain to what extent the Bell Telephone System exercises a patent control over both the radio and the motion picture industries.

The presentation is being staged by the Pat-

Patents Officer Defends System But Asks Changes

ent Office, whose head, Commissioner Conway P. Coe, laid before the committee the results of his five years' experience in administering the patent laws, outlining abuses

Defends Patent System As Aiding "Well Being"

Colonel Coe defended the patent system, as advancing the "economic well being" of the country. He conceded certain abuses, and recommended seven changes in patent laws, as follows: A 20-year limit on the combined period in which patents may be pending and the patent monopoly may run; a single court of patent appeals; simplification of interference procedure; restriction from two years to one of the period for copying a claim from an issued patent to assert priority of invention; extension of the commissioner's authority to require applicants to respond to an office action within less than the normal statutory period of six months, with a possible restriction to within not less than 30 days; reducing of the time during which the inventor may have public use of his invention, prior to filing his application from the present two years to one.

One of the major complaints is that, while Congress originally intended patents to be granted to individuals only, there has grown up a system whereby the large corporations—which are prohibited from making direct application for patents—are in fact the owners of the most important inventions even before patent protection is sought, through assignment from the individual inventor.

In its tentative report on the telephone investigation, the Federal Communications Commission pointed to the large number of patents which the telephone company held in the motion picture, radio and other non-telephone fields, and recommended that the company be required to divest itself of all non-communication activities.

The Department of Justice long has been interested in the patent situation in various industries, and six years ago brought patent suits against the Radio Corporation of America which resulted in the setting up of a patent pool similar to that which long has been operated in the automobile industry.

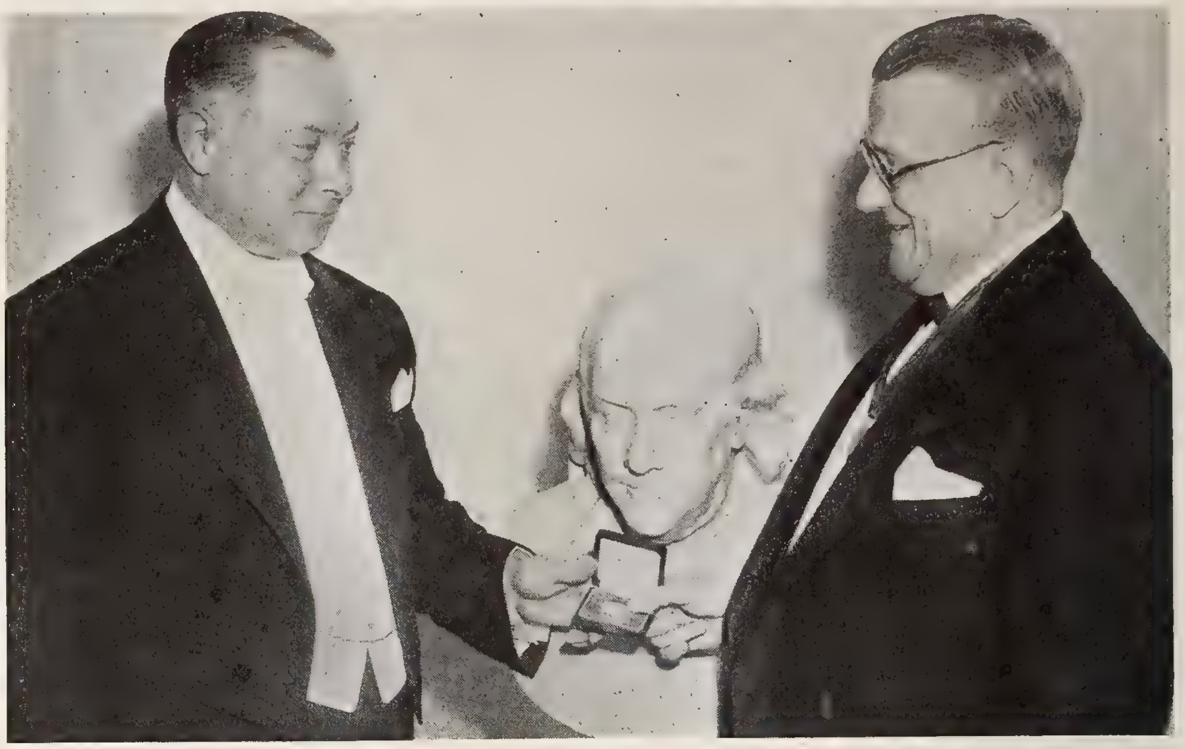
The patent situation was particularly acute in the radio industry, but was a subject of widespread dissatisfaction throughout many branches of the electrical industry, because of the vigorous infringement actions waged by the electric companies. The latest example of the electrics' determination to protect their patents was the suit against General Talking Pictures Corporation, recently held by the supreme court to have infringed patent through the use in talking picture equipment of apparatus limited by license notice to radio reception.

Schines Add Two Houses

The Schine Brothers circuit, which 18 months ago leased the 700 seat Russell at Maysville, Ky., has taken over the 500 seat Washington and the 300 seat Hollywood, both in Maysville. The two houses have been operated by Jack Frisch and Sam Kaplan. Mr. Frisch will be city manager. Ed May, former manager of the Russell, goes to Middleboro, Ky.

National Screen Service has promoted Jack Cohen, metropolitan sales manager, to eastern division manager.

Sarnoff Wins Achievement Award Of Poor Richard Club for Radio Work



David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, controlling RCA, NBC, Photophone sound, Victor records and a half interest in RKO, received the 1938 gold medal award of achievement from the Poor Richard Club at its 34th annual dinner at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia Tuesday evening, the 233rd birthday anniversary of Benjamin Franklin.

Charles Grakelow (right), president of the club, made the presentation to Mr. Sarnoff in front of a statue of Franklin, patron of the club. The dinner, attended by 1,200 Pennsylvanians and other business leaders followed.

The honor is conferred annually in recognition of one whose accomplishments have been adjudged to have helped in advancing American civilization and whose efforts have aided in establishing higher standards of living. Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, received the award last year.

Mr. Sarnoff accepted the award on behalf of the working men and women of radio "who have contributed to the creation of a new art and the development of a new industry."

Paying tribute to Franklin, the RCA president said that to him we are indebted more than to anyone else for "the traditions which have given America a free press and a free radio," adding, "And let us not forget the contributions made by advertising to the institutions of press and radio in our country. Advertising makes possible in America a free press, and the finest news covering in the world. Advertising makes possible in our land a free radio, and the finest broadcasting programs in the world."

Mr. Sarnoff delivered part of his address at the banquet by television, retiring to an adjacent room for the telecast.

Stockholders Pick Auditors for RCA

Stockholders of Radio Corporation, owners of Radio Corporation of America, National Broadcasting Company, Photophone, and half owners of RKO Radio, will appoint independent public accountants to audit and certify the corporation's accounts for the current year. The action is in line with recent movements seeking to amend weaknesses of corporation accounting practice, as revealed in the McKesson and Robbins case.

The RCA Manufacturing Company will build an addition to its Indianapolis plant. Expansion of the plant will increase the company's employment rolls by more than 1,000, J. M. Smith, vice-president, said. The RCA plant there is building all the sound equipment for the New York and San Francisco fairs.

Kansas Exhibitors Hold Five Regional Meetings

More than 150 Kansas exhibitors attended the five regional meetings of the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association held in the week at Topeka, Salina, Stockton, Independence, and Pratt by Frank Cassil, St. Joseph, Mo., president of the group; secretary, and other officers and directors.

This is the largest number ever to have attended official meetings of the group, and at each one exhibitors pledged 100 per cent cooperation to the KMTA executive committee in its plan to submit legislation outlawing the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in Kansas.

William Goldman Theatres, Inc., of Philadelphia, has adopted a double coverage group insurance program providing protection for employees in a circuit of seven theatres operated by the company in Pennsylvania.

The Great Man Votes

(RKO-Radio)

Political Comedy Drama

Showman can tell their customers that the good news they've been reading about this picture in the syndicated columns is gross understatement. Showmen who take their customers into their confidence on occasion can go a step farther and guarantee it. No American will dispute the first assertion and no present or future voter will accept a refund. This is, on many a count, just about the most natural audience natural the studios have turned out since the gross average started slipping

This is not a million dollar picture. It is not chock full of marquee personalities. It is not, although its renown may spread and make it so, a picture likely to shatter opening-night records. But it is a picture more likely than not to hang up a cross-continent record for building up grosses from day to day and holding over on popular demand. It is as suitable for the greatest city as the smallest town, and its natural audience is composed of all those Americans who vote or ever intend to. That group numbers, roughly, a million potential and quite probable ticket buyers.

Nobody has been shouting that this picture is propaganda for Americanism, and it isn't. It is a story about politics and politicians, mainly an amusing story, never a preachment. But it does as nice a job of reminding people what the ballot box is for and about as ever has been done by screen, radio or otherwise, smiling the while and never for a second putting aside the principal job of entertaining. (It is quite possible that not even the men behind the picture ever gave this aspect of the thing a thought.)

John Barrymore plays the great man who votes, and those showmen mentioned in the foregoing who take their customers into their confidence can tell them that this quite incredible performer has here the richest role he's had since he taught Broadway audiences "Hamlet," not excepting his silk-hatted politician in "Hold That Co-Ed" or any of the other highlights in his latest and greatest career. The great man of the title is a former scholar who has turned from book to bottle. He works, slightly, as a night watchman, and his children, who know him for what he is and isn't, are his only admirers as the picture opens. Then it is discovered that he is the sole voter in a key precinct and the politicians arrive bearing inducements. What he does about this situation, and about the relatives who want to take the children away from him, and a great many other things, make up the story, a story told with consummate artistry on the screen and not to be told here or elsewhere, in any tepid synopsis.

Mr. Barrymore's supporting cast is more competent than commercial. Virginia Weidler, as the daughter, confirms the suspicion found in "Out West with the Hardys" that she is a great child actress. Peter Holden, as the son, is almost as impressive. Katharine Alexander, Clarence Kolb and Donald MacBride stand out among the adult players, although the star is first, last and always the commanding personality producer, doubtlessly rates first and top credit for putting together a production as realistic as a newsreel, as plain as a well edited newspaper and as powerful as the camera can be at its best. Garson Kanin's direction has about it the supreme artistry of seeming artlessness, his players appearing to meander rather than go and come, his incidents to happen rather than to be made to. Much of this would be due, naturally, to the commonsense screen play written by John Twist from the sensibly conceived story by Gordon Malherbe Hillman. And there is debt, too, to camera man Russell Metty, whose lens saw and reported a plain, powerful picture and forebore to glamorize it.

The time of the picture is 1923, but could be now, and the place is an American city, not necessarily a metropolis. The subject is politics but the picture is not political. It deals with "the party" but doesn't say which one. The film is a natural for any and every motion picture screen in the United States and its possessions.

SEES BRIGHTER DAY FOR HOLLYWOOD IN JAPAN

New Government and Premier Favorable to American Product, Says A. A. Lowe, Home

Hollywood product may not suffer after all in Japan from the Japanese-German-Italian "cultural," military and economic bloc. The new Japanese Government under the new premier, Baron Kiichiro Hiranuma, is considered favorable to American motion pictures, and the Japanese Army, predominant factor and known definitely to like films from this country, is firmly behind the premier.

This is the report brought back to New York from Tokyo by Alfred A. Lowe, former general manager for UA in Japan, who, after a short vacation, will receive a new UA sales assignment abroad. He is succeeded in Tokyo by Joe Goltz, for the last ten years with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in South America and the Orient.

Banned More Than Year

For more than a year, until last fall, American motion pictures had been banned in Japan together with other foreign films, except German. Prior to that, more than 400 American pictures had been shown yearly, making the problem of circulation a serious one for the distributors of films from the United States because of the competition among themselves. A few months of the ban brought realization of the inability of German and French films to fill the gap. Although the number of Japanese-produced films during the ban increased from the 500 a year put out before that period, the quality fell down under the increased pressure.

Then the Japanese government got together with the eight large American companies and a solution was prepared. At the same time, as reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of June 11, 1938, double bills increased, due to the shortage of outstanding product and the reduced footage of all pictures under the three-hour show limitation.

Ban Lifted in September

Although actually delayed until the end of last October, the ban on American films was lifted in September of 1938. The eight majors under the new agreement were permitted to import $300,000 worth of pictures, with the base rate figured at one and one-half cents a foot, the total approximating 200 features. With the home offices apparently desiring representation for its own sake, allocations for the companies were figured by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and the foreign managers of the companies, working together in New York. Arrived at finally as an equitable basis was the number of pictures imported by each during the previous three years. According to Mr. Lowe, this will give United Artists 19 or 20 films to bring into Japan.

In consideration of this the eight majors lent the Japanese Government 3,000,000 yen (about $750,000) without interest for three years. The payments were to be made at the rate of 750,000 yen a month for four months. The last of these fell due January 10th. The money, which the Japanese Government will turn over to a bank in San Francisco, is not to be touched by either party, representing as it does accumulated film rentals (on reissues) during the time when new American films had been prohibited in Japan, and the money the companies had on hand at the time the ban went into effect.

ALFRED A. LOWE

Rentals Cannot Be Exported

Rentals collected on films shown under the new agreement are not allowed to leave the country, save for print costs, which may come out if the films have been approved by the censor, as they usually are, according to Mr. Lowe. He said that in four years United Artists had had only three pictures banned because of censorship restrictions. Cutting, however, is frequent.

Although in the new agreement there was a clause saying that the Japanese could terminate the agreement after the first of the year, no change is expected until the Diet meets in April, at which time, it is reported, a new measure covering every phase of the motion picture industry will be presented to the legislative body.

The Government itself, in addition to watching over native film production, makes ten to twelve propaganda features a year, while the Tourist Bureau makes hundreds of propaganda shorts. Regular film production is still at about the mark set prior to the ban, 500 a year, with too few outstanding productions for the key situations from which comes the bulk of film revenue, said Mr. Lowe. The Japanese, however, are studying film methods all over the world. The consensus, he said, still seems to be that the Japanese Government has no wish to offend the American film industry.

Willing to Pay More

One positive accomplishment of the ban, Mr. Lowe said, seems to have been the better attitude taken by Japanese exhibitors towards American distributors, the Japanese theatremen, now realizing their need for American pictures and willing to pay more and to set up a single bill policy in many instances.

The main circuits are Shochiku (about 400 houses) and Toho (about 300 houses), both of which are also producers. These control, rather than own their theatres, resembling in operations the American booking agencies. Prior to the war with China, theatre building had increased every year, with 1,800 houses in the whole territory now and not more than 65 of them showing only foreign pictures. Peculiar to the Japanese exhibitor is the ban on publicity in the main film district in Tokyo near the Palace, Radio advertising also is prohibited.

Of the approximately 1,800 theatres, about 125 are in Manchukuo, which still remains a closed market, although Mr. Lowe feels that the American distributors may yet be able to make a deal with the Monopoly Bureau there. Manchukuo is importing 500,000 yen of German films, a great part of which will go to Japan, which is looking for business on a barter basis. In China the situation of American pictures continues unchanged, with no distribution save in some half-dozen large cities, such as Shanghai, Peking, Hong Kong, and Tientsin, Mr. Lowe said.

Freeman Not Planning Studio Revisions

Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount vice-president and home office representative at the studio, arrived in New York last week for a very brief visit, and left the city for the coast on Monday. On his arrival he said the studio was in excellent shape, both as to efficiency of operations and morale of the personnel. (Picture in Pictorial Section).

Mr. Freeman declined to discuss production affairs, explaining that he is "still in kindergarten" in Hollywood. He said however, that new season production plans would not be discussed until Neil F. Agnew, vice-president and distribution head, makes his annual visit to the studio later on.

Paramount's theatre operators probably would hold a general meeting this year, although no date or place has been set yet, he said.

Columbia Holds First Pan-American Meeting

Columbia's first Pan-American convention was held last week in Rio de Janeiro and in Buenos Aires. At both of these meetings new season product was discussed and it was announced that the company had acquired distribution rights of seven Spanish language productions to be made in Mexico.

Cash awards on serial sales have been set by Columbia for its "Personal Achievement" sales campaign.

Ben Agren, head of Monogram's auditing department for the past ten months, has been appointed comptroller of the company by W. Ray Johnston, president.

Government Stand Unsound in 'Trust' Issue, Say Majors

The major company defendants in the pending Department of Justice New York anti-trust case charge that "certain of the positions taken by the Government are fundamentally unsound."

Replying to the Government's arguments opposing their motion for a bill of particulars and a more definite statement of charges, the companies last Thursday in a supplemental memorandum jointly answered the Department.

In a brief filed with Judge William Bondy in U. S. district court for the Southern District of New York, the majors say that the Government's premise that a motion for a bill of particulars will be granted only when the complaint is defective is erroneous; that the decision in the Federal Sugar Institute case, as cited, is not authority for denying any of the particulars requested in the present case; that the Government's references to the possible availability to defendants of deposition, discovery and interrogatories under the new Federal Civil Procedure rules are irrelevant and obscure the issue, and that the new rules have not abolished "any prior distinction between a motion for a more definite statement and a motion for a bill of particulars."

In conclusion, "Defendants respectfully submit that the granting of their motion (for a bill of particulars) is within the sound discretion of the Court and that, for the reasons set forth . . . their motion should be granted."

A ruling by Judge Bondy on the motion is not expected for four weeks.

Lamar Hardy, United States District Attorney for the Southern District of New York, returned to private law practice this week. He had been expected to figure prominently in the prosecution of the Government's anti-trust case against the majors. Gregory F. Noonan, his assistant, succeeds him.

Eight Chicago Theatres Drop Out of Trust Suit

The anti-trust fight between Chicago independents and the major companies and affiliated circuits reaches a crisis this week with the presentation of a petition to Federal Judge Wilkerson to rule as to whether or not there will be a limitation to the examination of witnesses by the majors' defense attorneys in a series of depositions they plan to take.

Last Friday and Saturday a number of complainant independents were questioned by defendant attorneys in regard to the operation of the theatres owned or leased by the plaintiffs.

Objected to by attorneys for the plaintiffs, Rosenberg and Stein, were questions regarding statements of profit and loss, and Judge Wilkerson is now to rule on their propriety.

In the past week two independent circuits, Goodman and Harrison and Joseph Stern theatres, have left the ranks as plaintiffs.

At present 86 plaintiffs remain in the suit representing 93 theatres. Originally there were 101 theatres and 89 plaintiffs.

Ruling Set Feb. 17 in B.&K. Contempt Case

Federal Judge Woodward in Chicago will hand down a decision February 17 on the application of the Department of Justice for a bill of particulars in the Government's contempt action against B. & K. and major distributors.

COMBINE WOULD SELECT FILMS, NOT CUT RENTALS

Business Manager of Wisconsin-Michigan Independents Proposes Department on Bookings

A new type of independent theatre "buying combine," definitely committed to selecting for members the type of product best suited to their operation, and not intended to force rental concessions from distributors through the power of mass purchasing, is in the making in Wisconsin and Michigan, as proposed by Ray A. Tesch, motion picture attorney and business manager of the Independent Theatres Protection Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan.

Differing from previous and existing independent exhibitor "buying combines," against which distributors have campaigned down through the years because of holdouts for price and other concessions, the Wisconsin-Michigan exhibitors' proposition is in its entirety planned as a booking selection service. The members themselves would continue to buy their own product but the new project would assist in the formulation of contracts.

Sees Clarified Relations

The method would improve dealings between the distributors and independent exhibitors, according to Mr. Tesch, by clarifying the product relations between them.

One or more distributors have refused to do business with independent exhibitor combines in the past, in most instances directly causing their dissolution.

"This is not a plan to cut film rentals," explained Mr. Tesch. "The department would be purely advisory and would merely give the small, outlying, independent theatre owners the same advantage on buying films that the members of the circuits now enjoy."

"The smaller exhibitors really need such a service," Mr. Tesch said, "for they don't have the opportunity to travel hundreds of miles to the exchanges and to study all reports on current film product.

"When a theatre chain purchases films for its members, it does so with the expert's knowledge. I think that the independent showman is entitled to an expert's advice, too, and that is what he would receive from such a department as I have proposed.

Would Give Expert Forecasts

"If the smaller theatre had a centralized bureau of expert film analysts and buyers to advise them on their choice, they would be money ahead by avoiding films which have proved to be less profitable in their type of operation." The proposed organization, he added "could gather reports from all sides and could give fairly accurate forecasts on the kind of business to be expected from a certain film on a certain night in a certain locality. The circuits gather and supply that information to their units now."

Mr. Tesch said tentatively that the film rental advisory department would consist of an office of four or five persons, with total expenses estimated at $250 to $300 a week. The Wisconsin independent association has 100 members. If 50 of those members should join the advisory department, they would share the cost on a proportional basis so that the average exhibitor would pay perhaps $5 or $6 a week for the service.

"By paying his $5 a week an exhibitor would be money ahead if he should be able to avoid a box office 'lemon' a month," Mr. Tesch declared. "We would aim at better, not cheaper buying."

1,193 Theatres in New York Area

Theatres in the New York metropolitan area total 1,193, seven less than a year ago. Seating capacity, however, has increased by 500 seats to 1,344,398, due to the fact that new theatres replacing demolished houses are of larger seating capacity. There are 117 theatres closed, against 119 a year ago.

The figures are contained in the 1939 directory of film theatres issued this week by the New York Film Board of Trade.

Circuit theatres in the area total 754, of which 556 are unaffiliated with distributors and 198 are affiliated. The unaffiliated circuits' capacity exceeds the affiliated circuits by 233,000 seats.

There are 439 theatres listed as independent and not grouped in circuits, these accounting for 331,482 seats, 20,000 more than a year ago. The number of independent theatres is unchanged from last year's total, although they have increased by 13 in the New York portion of the metropolitan area and decreased by a similar amount in New Jersey.

Of the seven houses fewer than last year, the affiliated circuits account for two and the unaffiliated circuits for five.

The analysis also shows a total of 1,076 open theatres in the area, with a seating capacity of 1,246,339, and 117 closed houses with 98,059 seats. A total of 863 units are in the state of New York, including New York City, Long Island and all of New York State, south of Kingston. The New Jersey portion of the metropolitan area, north of Trenton, has 330 theatres with 351,125 seats.

Ten theatres were equipped for sound in 1938, reducing the number of silent houses to 13, all of which are closed. There are 104 sound-equipped theatres not operating, compared with 96 a year ago.

Commodore Pictures, a new independent producing firm, has made plans to start production about the first of the year. The company is headed by Samuel Bronstein, with D. Freshwater as vice-president and Mel Abbott production manager.

Cooperative Theatres of Ohio, organized and operated by Milton Mooney, which, to date, has serviced theatres only in northern Ohio, will open offices in Cincinnati soon to service exhibitors in the southern Ohio territory.

UA Partners Set Sliding Scale on Distribution Cost

A sliding scale of distribution charges for all United Artists producers, under which pictures grossing the most would receive the lowest rates, was approved unanimously by the company's owner members just before the conclusion of their annual meeting on Wednesday in Hollywood.

The plan was made retroactive for all producers, whether stockholders in the company or not, for 1938 and will apply to all present and future deals. Murray Silverstone, executive head of United Artists, told a press conference after the meeting that the plan would bring about the lowest distribution costs in the history of the company and the industry. The owner members also voted a substantial reduction of distribution costs, also retroactive, for all pictures distributed in England and Canada.

Mr. Silverstone said that the amount of product for next season would be greater than that for the present year, but the full schedules of individual producers have not been set. Concerning the possibility that Selznick International will remain with United Artists, the executive said he would prefer having David Selznick make his own announcement. He added that one of the reasons for his remaining in Hollywood was to confer with John Hay Whitney, who will arrive there next week.

Predicting the best year in the company's history for its 20th anniversary, Mr. Silverstone pointed out that the business sold to date for the first half of 1939 is greater than the total amount the same period last year.

Alexander Korda was to leave Hollywood on Thursday for England, where he will complete "Four Feathers," after which he will return to America to produce here. Charlie Chaplin, Mr. Silverstone said, definitely will deliver "The Dictator" this year. Douglas Fairbanks will contribute two or three pictures this year and Samuel Goldwyn will contribute a substantial number.

Earlier reports have said that Edward Small, Selznick International and Walter Wanger will each have six features, and Hal Roach five.

The stockholders voted an extension of the release contract of Edward Small Productions to 1945 as originally scheduled.

Mr. Goldwyn announced the selection of James Roosevelt, his vice-president, as his representative on the United Artists board, succeeding James Mulvey.

Mr. Silverstone suggested that the partners concentrate upon product for the English-speaking countries and Latin-America.

Pathe's Plan Set

The new plan for realigning Pathe Film Corporation's assets was sent to preferred and common stockholders and to the Securities and Exchange Commission Tuesday. Under the plan a new company, probably to be called Pathe Laboratories, Inc., will be formed, to which certain assets will be transferred. Among them are some 65,000 shares of Monogram common stock, past due notes of RKO in the amount of $248,000, and the film processing laboratories in Bound Brook, New Jersey, and New York City. In addition, $200,000 will be transferred to the new company for working capital. Within 60 days after consummation of the plan, Pathe plans to distribute 50 per cent of the new company's stock to its stockholders as a bonus and the remaining 50 per cent within the next two years.

18 of 20 "Best Sellers" Filmed Or Considered for Production

Hollywood has produced or is considering production of 18 of the 20 "best seller" books of the present day, on the basis of reader preferences revealed by a two-year study of the book tastes of "the Average American" by George Gallup's American Institute of Public Opinion. The survey avoided urban readers, generally, as not giving indicative data.

"Hollywood did not create the original popularity of best selling books," said Mr. Gallup Sunday in a signed article in the New York Times; "but in giving them film treatment and a far greater audience, the movies have unquestionably added to the circulation of the books themselves."

The survey listing follows, in order of preference:

1. The Bible.
2. "Gone with the Wind," now being filmed by David Selznick.
3. "Anthony Adverse," filmed by Warner Brothers.
4. "The Citadel." MGM.
5. "How to Win Friends and Influence People," now being considered as film material.
6. "The Good Earth," filmed by MGM.
7. "Ben-Hur." MGM.
8. "Northwest Passage," being considered for film production.
9. "Little Women," filmed by RKO.
10. "A Tale of Two Cities." MGM.
11. "Les Miserables," filmed by Fox, Universal, United Artists and by French companies.
12. "Magnificent Obsession," filmed by Universal.
13. "Adventures of Tom Sawyer." Selznick.
14. "Treasure Island." MGM.
15. "Count of Monte Cristo." United Artists.
16. "Robinson Crusoe." Film Booking offices. 1928.
17. "Ivanhoe," not filmed.
18. "The Green Light," filmed by Warner Brothers.
19. "David Copperfield." MGM.
20. "Call of the Wild." United Artists.

Margaret Mitchell's "Gone with the Wind" was shown by the survey to have been the 1938 choice of the "Average American," and especially of women. Mr. Gallup attributed this to the publicity given by David Selznick to the casting for the book's chief character, Scarlett O'Hara, to be enacted by Vivien Leigh. The institute director also noted that most of the books following the Bible and "Gone with the Wind" in public taste had been given screen treatment, and that even the Bible had been filmed in part many times.

Dayton, O., Goes Social for Shaw's Film 'Pygmalion'

by VIRGINIA D. STURM
Motion Picture Editor
Dayton Daily News

The eyes of not only motion picture folk were on Dayton Wednesday night for the mid-western premiere of "Pygmalion," but of financial and social interests as well, for the significant idea which motivated the choice of Dayton for the event, for Dayton, average in size, normal in wealth and culture, was tagged the "typical American city."

Society of the Miami Valley apparently relished the idea of a premiere in the grand manner, such as this was, for it arrived, formally attired, from Cincinnati, Columbus, Middletown, Indianapolis and many small towns, with the spectacle made more brilliant by spotlighting.

Film critics were here from these cities and Cleveland, as well as Loew and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executives. Several thousand persons crammed the street. Special promotion activities had taken interest to a high peak, and the reserved seat performance had been sold out for days.

Dayton News radio, WHIO, broadcast opinions of critics from the theatre lobby.

Acceptance of "Pygmalion" here was unquestioned. Everyone appeared delighted with the Shaw treatment of the mythical idea, and spontaneous applause greeted the first appearance of Leslie Howard on the screen. The cultured audience as well as the fans had flowing compliments for the production. Typically Shavian, the picture, casting and acting are excellent, entertaining, and definitely on the "must see" list.

Officers Reelected

Officers of the Motion Picture Associates were reelected this week, led by Jack Ellis of RKO, president. The others are: Moe Sanders, first vice-president; Matthew Cahan, second vice-president; Sol Trauner, treasurer; Moe Fraum, secretary; Charles Penser, financial secretary, and Louis Kutinsky, sergeant-at-arms.

Hays to Coast

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, left for the coast last Friday night, and is expected back in about three weeks.

TRAFFIC NO REASON FOR REFUSING LICENSE

Court of Appeals Calls License Commissioner's Action "Arbitrary" in Refusing Permit

In the heaven that exhibitors might dream about, the streets would be choked with automobiles of patrons heading for the box-office. It would have been a rude awakening, therefore, to Frederick Small, in New York City, when he at first was denied a license to build a motion picture theatre on the ground that "the erection of a theatre at the proposed location would increase the pedestrian and vehicle traffic so as to create a condition dangerous to the traveling public, and that the noise, traffic congestion and attendant parking problem resulting from the erection of the theatre at the proposed location would be a detriment to the general welfare, public health and safety of the community."

Exhibitor Wins Case

Mr. Small sought the aid of the courts. He lost in the lower court, but won a complete victory in the state court of appeals (In re Small vs. Moss).

Terming "arbitrary" the action of Paul Moss, city license commissioner, the Appeals Court declared that it had searched the law in vain to find the grounds for refusal of the permit. The right of the state or municipality to license theatres was not questioned, the opinion said, but under the New York law, as written, refusal could not be based on possible traffic conditions which a theatre might bring to a street.

Other business enterprises, it was pointed out, might attract more traffic than a theatre, yet the commissioner would have no right to stop the construction of such a building. Every property owner has the right of free access to his own land. Merely because a theatre must be licensed for certain purposes does not mean that traffic conditions can be a bar.

Cites Business Status

"There is no law which expressly provides that the commissioner of licenses may refuse a license for a lawful business which would create a traffic danger for the travelers on the street," said the court. "The right of the state to require that in the public interest theatres must be licensed has long been asserted and invariably sustained by the courts, but never on the ground that the traffic brought to a theatre might cause a danger to the public using the street."

The commissioner's argument was based on the fact that the licensing law gave him power "to pass upon the location of the theatre" and contended that this included the "power to determine whether the location is one where the erection of a theatre would promote, or at least not harm, the public welfare and the public safety."

This argument was somewhat similar to that made by the same commissioner two years ago in the case of Goelet vs. Moss (273 N. Y. 503). In the Goelet case, permission was sought to erect a theatre on Park Avenue and 53rd Street (where the Normandie theatre now stands). Although this section was zoned for retail purposes, the license was refused on the ground that public welfare and good city planning required that the section be reserved for high class residential and retail building. The commissioner was reversed and the license granted. Said the court: "The history of the statutes governing the licensing of theatres in this community confirms our opinion that the duty of the licensor is to consider the question from the standpoint of public health, safety and morals only, and not as a problem in city planning."

Cites Near Churches

Whether a theatre may be erected next to a place of worship is open to qupestion. (Cohen vs. Moss, 167 Misc. 381.) In the Cohen case, license was denied on the ground that a synagogue was planned next door. "The only question," the court said, "is whether it is contrary to public morals to allow the erection of a theatre near a place of religious worship. The law-making body undoubtedly has it within its power specifically to prohibit that kind of structure under the circumstances indicated. This it has failed to do.

"I feel so strongly, however, that it is such extremely bad taste and so undesirable to permit the erection of places of amusement near houses of worship, that if the synagogue involved was functioning as a temple of worship, or at least in the process of actual construction, I would hold that an issue of public morals was presented. The public interest to be conserved would then be paramount to the private right under the zoning laws to build the theatre. However, the synagogue is neither functioning as such nor has any attempt been made to proceed with its construction."

Under the circumstances, the judge reversed the commissioner and granted the license. However, this decision, which was rendered a year ago, was made by a lower court.

Must Conform to Law

On the other hand, the location of a proposed theatre must be lawful. No license can be granted in an area which is zoned for residential use, or where construction might violate a rule of the fire, health or building department, or department of water supply, gas and electricity. In the case of Ormsby vs. Bell (218 N. Y. 212, decided 1916) a license was denied on the ground that the theatre was too close to a cleaning and dyeing establishment where explosive fluids were kept.

Where the law gives the commissioner jurisdiction, he has complete discretion. Ordinarily, the courts will not interfere with this discretion, except where the judgment is considered so unreasonable that a real injustice is done. However, where no jurisdiction is granted under the law, there is no discretion to be exercised, the courts have held.

RKO to Have from 40 to 48 in 1939

On the coast this week, RKO's chief executive, George J. Schaefer, hinted that, while the new program calls for a maximum of 48 pictures, the total more probably would be about 40; that the emphasis would be on large budget pictures and less upon "B" pictures; that Leslie Howard probably would make three films for the company in England.

Carole Lombard, Claudette Colbert, Cary Grant, and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., have been signed for the new season product. Mr. Howard's first English-produced picture probably will be "The Man Who Found Himself."

Judge Approves RKO Plan; Confirmation Now Awaited

Accepted now as a formality, the final seal of approval on the RKO plan of reorganization advanced by the Atlas Company and its supporters, and opposed for some time by minority stockholders' representatives, thus delaying the emergence of the company from Section 77B, will be forthcoming some time after February 4th. The formal order approving the plan was filed Wednesday in the U. S. district court in New York.

Federal Judge William Bondy signed his approval Tuesday. Creditors and stockholders have the right to withdraw their consents before February 4th.

Another hearing will be held next Thursday in New York City federal court. Judge Bondy will be handed a list, for approval, of the proposed board of directors of the reorganized company. Observers' speculation fixes the probable board lineup as follows: George J. Schaefer, president; Ned E. Depinet and William Mallard, vice-presidents; Peter J. Rathvon, of the Atlas Corporation, as an associate; W. G. Van Schmus, managing director of the Music Hall; L. P. Yandell, assistant treasurer of Radio Corporation of America; Lawrence Green, an attorney; William Hamilton, an investment broker; possibly, David Sarnoff, president of RCA, and Floyd Odlum, of the Atlas Corporation. If the latter two are not on the board, it is anticipated they will be personally represented, as will Nelson Rockefeller. Also scheduled to be presented to Judge Bondy on Thursday are the underwriting provisions for the new company.

The plan specifies that the reorganized company may pay no dividend on the new preferred stock before February 1, 1940. The participation of the Rockefeller interests is reduced from 500,000 shares of common RKO stock to 415,000 shares; and the company has no further interest in the operation of the Music Hall and the Center theatre in the Rockefeller Radio City development.

Federal Judge William Bondy has signed an order permitting H. Cassell & Company to file its claim against RKO as holder of $217,000 10-year six per cent gold debentures.

The Lehman Corporation through its attorneys, Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett, has filed notice in federal district court in New York applying for leave to file proof of claim against RKO.

BOOK REVIEW

MOTION PICTURES AND RADIO, Modern Techniques for Education, by Elizabeth Laine. A publication of the New York State Regents' Inquiry. 165 pages, indexed. McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York.

This survey, one of a series of studies conducted by the Board of Regents Inquiry into the Character and Cost of Public Education in the State of New York, reports competently, though at times superficially, on present educational uses of motion pictures and radio and discusses, somewhat vaguely, long range plans for future utilization of these media in the field of education. The book is written entirely from the viewpoint of the professional educator and never steps out of the limits of that perspective.

After a brief but significant discussion of the commercial film industry Dr. Elizabeth Laine discusses types of nontheatrical educational pictures presently available and the distribution facilities for them, all information readily available from film library catalogues. She notes briefly the industry's stand that the commercial screen should be reserved purely for entertainment and, to a note concerning the film's social responsibility, adds this: ". . . Nor is the mere avoidance of blatant indecency enough. Films should neither convey incorrect factual information nor implant false conceptions or improper attitudes but instead should instruct and educate correctly, and in a way that is acceptable to those most deeply interested in the improvement of the social order."

The author adds a word of praise for the many industrial films in the documentary class and emphasizes throughout the undisputed fact of the value of motion pictures in conveying factual information.

The section on radio lists at length current programs which might be classed as educational and calls it a "serious indictment" of the station owners that they devote the best broadcasting hours of the day to "sponsored programs of the light entertainment variety."

The tone of the section is one of regret that radio is in the hands of private commercial enterprise. "In Germany, Italy, Russia and certain other European countries," Dr. Laine says, "the problem of deciding what people shall hear over the air is comparatively simple." She points out later that, of course, "our method is in keeping with democratic principles."

The purpose of the study was a reportorial survey of the two media, and abstract discussion of their potentialities is kept at a minimum. Perhaps because of this the book leaves the impression that the author has assumed a thesis to be true and is marshaling facts to support it. The general tone is that the public should and must be given education whether they like it or not.—

FROM HERALD READERS

CALLS RELEASE CHART GREAT TIME SAVER

To the Editor of the Herald:

I would like to take this opportunity to tell you how much I enjoy one of your new features in the Motion Picture Herald, that of the Index to The Release Chart.

It is certainly one of those conveniences that I sometimes wonder how we got along without it before. In looking up the different pictures and the distributors it saves much time and is referred to many times a day not only by myself, but all of my employees.

Wishing you continued success throughout 1939.—Leonard C. Worley, City Manager, Publix Great States Theatres, Madison Theatre Bldg., Peoria, Ill.

CALLS "A" FILMS A MINUS QUANTITY

To the Editor of the Herald:

I have just finished reading this week's Herald.

If the distributors had played fair this fall and put out the pictures that they promised, then maybe exhibitors would have enough enthusiasm to do some commenting, but since the powers that be have seen fit to hedge on their part of the bargain, then no one can blame us if we're kinda down in the mouth.

I bought a lot of "A" pictures last fall but about all I've had so far is just "A" allocations. If they sell them that way and have the money to build them promised and contracted, why can't they play fair?

Business hasn't been so good out this way but if we had pictures that were priced according to their drawing power, then there would be no squawks.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas.

ANSWERS EXHIBITOR ON WESTERNS' DRAW

To the Editor of the Herald:

I being a subscriber to your Herald and a member of your "Managers' Round Table" and a not too often contributor to your "What the Picture Did for Me" columns, would like to correct the impression that one exhibitor wishes to leave on everyone regarding the Hopalong Cassidy westerns, namely, the report on "The Frontiersman" in the January 14th issue, in which this exhibitor states that he would like to see or rather get a Hopalong Cassidy western, as all that he had to do one time was to advertise a Cassidy western and they flocked in.

I happen to be able to say that I have had the pleasure of running every Cassidy western that has ever been released and have repeated on a good many of them.

I can say, and truthfully say for everyone of my western fans, that there is no finer western put out than the Cassidy westerns (and they and I certainly know westerns).

A far as business is concerned, I can only say that I wish that I had 16 instead of six a year, that it is a pleasure to present one of these westerns on my screen, and that if this exhibitor will only get out and sell his pictures and let Paramount alone and let them continue making pictures as they have made the Cassidys, all of us exhibitors will be better off.

So let's all cheer for Harry Sherman and his "Better" class westerns, the Cassidys.—Cecil Ward, Stone Theatre, Bassett, Virginia.

"Gunga Din," the RKO Radio picture, will have its world premiere at the Radio City Music Hall January 26th. The film is based on the Rudyard Kipling poem and the screen play was prepared by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur. Cary Grant, Victor McLaglen and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., head a cast of more than 1,000.

Marino Moves Office

Sam Marino, producer of one-reel sport subjects, has moved his headquarters to 723 Seventh Avenue, New York. Mr. Marino will start production on two new subjects, "All Girl Football Team" and "Riding Habit," at the end of the month. They will be distributed by Philip Lewis of American Trading Association.

Ghosen Resumes Charge

J. T. Ghosen of Sedalia, Mo., will resume full control of his four houses in Clinton, Tipton, Versailles and Sweet Springs, Mo. For the past year he has had an operations arrangement with the Glen W. Dickinson Theatres, Inc.

INCREASING LEGISLATIVE ATTENTION ANTICIPATED BY BRITISH INDUSTRY

Meetings Held by Films Council Advisory Committee and Licensing Groups Forecast New Phase of Government Control

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

Whatever be the outcome of 1939 for Britain's film industry and its myriad minions, it would seem, at this early stage of the New Year, that it is not to be let slip by without formidable attention on the part of its legislators, both constitutional and municipal. The net result likely to accrue is naturally difficult to estimate. That, however, cannot be said of the effort behind.

Guiding Councils Meet

Already ere the first half of the year's first month will have passed, at least three councils of prime and pivotal purpose, all charged with the consideration of present legislative positions, and if need be with proposals for amendment or improvement, will have met in solemn assembly.

Most urgent and most powerful of these is the Films Council, the body formed under the 1938 Films Act, which was set to meet for its initial 1939 assembly on January 12th. Same day, too, was appointed for the reassembly of the Home Office Advisory Committee, recently brought together by the Home Office to help in the administration and maybe adjustment of the 1909 Cinematograph Act. Next day there joined in Conference at County Hall, London, the thirteen licensing bodies functioning in and around the Metropolis seeking an exchange of views and opinions, of experiences and results.

It is probably not uncharacteristic that two of these bodies—the Government sponsored Films Council and the Advisory Committee, each of which is presumably intended to assist the industry in a legislative capacity,—will meet primed with a variety of views and suggestions from the industry itself, the incorporation of all of which would be impossible by their very divergence. Inevitably, and though both bodies have been approached by the trade for action, any decision they may take will provoke criticism and opposition if not downright sabotage from one or other of the various trade groups.

Quota Criticism Grows

Most interest, probably, will be centered upon the activities of the Films Council concerned, as it is, mainly with the commodity upon which the whole industry is based. The acute dissatisfaction of all sections of the trade with Mr. Stanley's Films Act is certain to crystalize itself into a direct and immediate challenge to the Act itself. The acute shortage of films, the distressing drop in production figures and the abnormally high rate of unemployment will bring to the Council early the criticisms and pleadings of exhibitors, producers and employees.

The Council has already launched into a consideration of the exhibitor problem of cooperative booking. (This has been discussed in Motion Picture Herald). They will, however, probably find themselves ever more urgently concerned with the suggestion, forthcoming from both labor unions and producers, that the quota figures should be increased. As forecast in these columns the united labor unions of the industry, covering technicians, electricians, writers, artists, directors and theatre employees, have presented to the Council a firm request that the quota percentages be raised in October when their new quota year starts. Though it has not been stated openly they are known to have the backing of those producers with whom they made united front during the Bill's Parliamentary stage. The Act, under section 15, empowers the Board of Trade to alter quota figures by order in Council. Labor is represented in the Films Council and their spokesman will avail themselves of the platform.

"MIKADO" SHOWN TO LONDON PRESS

"The Mikado," produced by Geoffrey Toye and General Film Distributors, and previewed last Wednesday at the Leicester Square theatre in London, according to word received from Aubrey Flanagan, "is a lavish production in color, faithfully following the stage version, with no pretension toward the modern film technique or contemporary comedy.

"The musical element is rich and equal to the best comic opera. Kenny Baker is pleasing, and Martyn Green is a puckish Koko. There is a powerful appeal in the Gilbert and Sullivan music."

Universal will release the film in North and South America and the Far East.

Producers Critical

Producers have recently been vociferous in the columns of the press in their pleas for either an increase of the quota, or the institution of a separate quota such as was promulgated while the Bill was before Parliament.

Another point for probable discussion by the Films Council is the tentative idea—it can hardly be termed as yet a proposal—that Australian films should be available to count for quota. The idea which propagates a reciprocity principle and which follows the New South Wales Government's Act in which a 15 per cent British quota is imposed on exhibitors, has already been mooted by the Board of Trade and they have aired the idea in a discussion of the subject with British producers.

It is immediately obvious that any such proposal would be opposed wholeheartedly and strenuously by producers whose production schedule would be affected, and by exhibitors whose commercial opinions on the merits of Australian films are—speaking generally—far from cordial.

Advisory Committee To Report

Keenly, too, though hardly with united vision, the trade will watch the deliberations of Sir Samuel Hoare's Home Office Advisory Committee, which adjourned its last meeting to prime itself with the enlightenment necessary for a constructive and comprehensive examination of the "non-flam" film situation with which so many trade problems are inextricably bound up. It will hear evidence from the Sub-Standard Cinematograph Association, representative mainly of manufacturers and dealers, that there is no case for drastic control. It will hear evidence from the CEA, that control of non-flam film shows is necessary on the grounds, not only of commercial fairness, but also of human safety. Laudably the Committee has sought representations from every interested group, and will, on hearing the evidence, make its own representations to the Home Secretary.

With the situation bound up with the whole question of licensing and indirectly of censorship, the trade considers this by no means the least urgent of 1939's many legislative problems. Inasmuch as the Cinematograph Act (1909) covers the whole field of film licensing and exhibiting, embraces management rules, safety regulations, censorship and even types of entertainment, the Advisory Committee will have a wide field to cover. And it is considered regrettable by exhibitors that it is composed exclusively of licensors and entirely unrepresentative of the licensees themselves.

Seat Control Question Up

Despite its local application the Licensing Pool of greater London authorities which arranged to meet for the first time this month is, in an indirect way, a shadow Cabinet of the Home Office Advisory Committee. The functioning of the London County Council has long been considered as a model for other municipalities, and already its operations on the seat price rule have awakened the interested attention of municipalities on a far wider field. It is Mr. Reginald Stamp's contention that its meetings will be only in the nature of a non-legislative parliament for the exchange of views and reporting of experiences, but there would seem to be little question that its decisions and pronunciamentos, if any, will not be lost upon other licensing authorities.

Among the subjects for review are seat control, the Home Office safety manual, unlicensed entertainments in Church Halls and Public Houses, television and Sunday openings, redundancy and, of course "horrific" and "A" films. Not even the minor, but by no means negligible, subject of standing in cinemas has been left out.

Bartholomew's Salary $125,249, Guardian Says

According to a report to the California superior court by Freddie Bartholomew's aunt and legal guardian, Miss Millycent Bartholomew, the boy actor is finally free of his legal struggles, and was able to save $94,324 from his 1938 earnings. The report covered Miss Bartholomew's guaradianship from December, 1937, when she took command, to December of the past year.

Revealed were Master Bartholomew's earnings for the past year: $125,249, of which $46,680 went for living expenses. The report also showed that his salary was raised by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer from $1,980 to $2,970 per week.

Film Course Programs Set

Additional programs have been arranged by the Film Library of the Museum of Modern Art for the Columbia University film course. Starting next Wednesday the programs are "Greed," the Erich Von Stroheim film; "Intolerance," directed by D. W. Griffith, February 1st, and "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," starring Valentino, February 8th.

TWO INDICTED IN UNION INQUIRY IN ST. LOUIS

Head of Operators' Local and State Legislator Named on Charges of Extortion

by RAY A. WEBSTER
in St. Louis

The persistence of a St. Louis newspaper reporter in delving for the facts for more than two years culminated Friday in the indictment by a state grand jury of Jon P. "Big" Nick, on charges of extortion of large sums from motion picture theatre operators through ruinous salary demands by the unions that Nick heads, the St. Louis Theatrical Brotherhood No. 6 and the Motion Picture Operators Union No. 143. Jointly indicted with Nick was Edward M. Brady, member of the Missouri legislature.

Inquiry Begun in 1936

Charles Marsalek, of the Post-Dispatch, began his inquiry in 1936, after, he said, he had heard that a fund of $15,000 had been collected by a hastily organized association of motion picture theatre owners at a time when the theatre men were negotiating a contract with the motion picture operators. The projectionists were demanding an increase of $10 a week, which would have cost the owners a payroll increase of $1,040 a year each, under the requirement that two operators be employed for each projection room.

After collection of the fund and its disbursement, the salary increase demand was dropped, the reporter said.

Everyone in the industry with whom the reporter talked at the time denied any knowledge of the collection of the fund; but shortly thereafter, in 1937, when the union again made demands, he heard rumors that another fund, this time $7,000, had been collected. He redoubled his efforts to learn why.

Check Turned Over to Grand Jury

Little by little, his persistence began to bring results. Only recently, he said, he learned that part of the money collected by the owners' association in 1936 had been paid by check against the fund indorsed by two theatre owners and by Mr. Brady, a member of the Missouri legislature, with the understanding that it would be turned over to Nick. This check, for $10,000, eventually came into the hands of the reporter, and subsequently into the hands of the grand jury.

When it became known a few days ago that the check had turned up, Mr. Brady, who was attending a session of the legislature, left the Capitol at Jefferson City. His whereabouts could not be ascertained.

Following the filing of the indictment, a police guard was placed over Nick, who is ill at his home with arthritis. Individual contributions to the fund by the theatre owners are said to have been around $150 or more.

Monogram Pictures has opened new offices in the Film Building in New Haven, with Philip Sherman as manager.

LIBRARY SPONSORING FILM BIBLIOGRAPHY

The publication of a three-volume bibliography compiled by WPA writers and intended to provide "the world's most comprehensive guide to the literature of the motion picture" will be sponsored by the Film Library of the Museum of Modern Art, John Hay Whitney, president, said this week.

The first volume is being published and preliminary work for the later volumes is under way. Included in Volume 1 are 9,000 book and magazine references grouped under five general headings, with 500 sub-classifications. Selected articles and reviews of 3,500 films from "The Fred Ott Sneeze," enacted for the Edison Kinetoscope in 1887, to "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" are incorporated in the book.

"The bibliography was conceived," Mr. Whitney said, "as a means of bringing order to the chaotic state of the motion picture's vast literature. Although the work includes comprehensive references to the European film, its total effect is to reveal the extent of America's contribution to this art and to establish continuity in the recorded history of the American film."

Aviatrices To Tour

Ruth Nichols, Cecile (Teddy) Kenyon, Margo Bain Tanner and Betty Huyler Gillies, women fliers, left New York for Hollywood this week to be the guests of the Twentieth Century-Fox studio for 10 days. Then the fliers, accompanied by starlets, will make an air tour of the country delivering prints of "Tail Spin."

Levine Leaves MGM

Nat Levine has requested and received his release from his associate producer contract at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer because of illness. He produced "Four Girls in White." Albert LeRoy, his assistant, will take over as producer in the Joe Cohen unit.

Birdwell Borrows Yorke

Gabe Yorke has been borrowed from the Producers' Association by Russell Birdwell, Selznick International, to spend two weeks checking the historical accuracy of "Gone With the Wind" publicity.

Set Condor Hearing

Attorneys for two groups of creditors of Condor Pictures, Inc., have been given until February 6th to present definite plans and arguments for either liquidation of the company's assets at once or for reorganization.

Portland Censors Renamed; Fees Reduced in Kansas

All members of the Portland, Ore., censor board of review have been reappointed. They are Mrs. Thomas M. Joyce, chairman; Ted R. Gamble, Major Paul Hathaway, Ed Weinbaum, Mrs. Josephine Forney, Mrs. Kent C. Hartung and Mrs. R. Gibson Hubbard.

The fees for inspection of original prints by the Kansas State censor board have been reduced by 50 per cent. Maximum charge of $2 per reel for originals will be reduced to $1, but a $1 charge for duplicate prints will remain the same. It is estimated that film companies will save about $5,000 annually out of approximate yearly fees of $30,000.

Following an additional review of the Amkino film "Professor Mamlock" the Ohio censor board has permanently banned the picture in Ohio. It previously was rejected.

Alfred Channing Nowitsky, manager of the National theatre, Richmond, Va., said this week he would make no further efforts to exhibit the film "Ecstasy," which was experiencing a record run at the house when Mrs. Judith Roberts, a Virginia censor, discovered the deletions ordered had not been made by the Eureka Corporation of New York, the distributor.

Deny Cruelty to Horses In Making of Feature

Sidney R. Kent, president, and Darryl F. Zanuck, production head of Twentieth Century-Fox, both denied this week the charge that horses used in "Jesse James" had been maltreated, as claimed by Sydney H. Coleman, president of the American Humane Association, in a letter to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Mr. Coleman declared the death of a horse followed "one of the most barefaced, wanton acts of cruelty to animals in the past few years."

In a letter to Mr. Coleman, Mr. Kent said that the scene which had led to the death of one horse was repeated with no injury. He asked why, with a representative on the grounds when the film was shot, Mr. Coleman had waited until the film was released to make his complaint. Mr. Zanuck pointed out that 300 horses were used in the 14 weeks it took to produce "Jesse James," and only the one was injured.

Republic's Releases Up to Schedule, Says Grainger

Republic's production and releases are up to schedule, James R. Grainger, president, said this week on his return to New York from a month's trip to the studio and the field.

Of 31 features scheduled, 14 have been delivered, and 11 westerns have been delivered of the 24 scheduled. A serial, "The Lone Ranger Rides Again," is being released February 1st. Three other serials are to be released during the year.

While in New Orleans last week Mr. Grainger said that "Wagons Westward," which will be based on the life of Sam Houston, "is the biggest production attempted by Republic so far, but we hope it will not cost more than $750,000."

BILLS UP ON BLUE LAWS, CHANCE GAMES, TAXES

Forty State Legislatures in Session and Even Theatre Parking Space Is Aired

With some 40 state legislative sessions now in full swing, the usual attention is being directed toward motion pictures, both by anti-film legislators and those favoring relief from existing restrictive statutes. A wide assortment of subjects already is up for consideration, ranging from taxation, Sunday closing, licensing of theatrical bookers, chance games, manpower in projection rooms, roadside billboards, length of shows and even dealing with theatre parking space.

Films for Court Records

In Congress, experimental use of talking films for the making of federal court records is being pressed by Representative Samuel Hobbs (Democrat, Ala.), who is sponsoring legislation authorizing the installation of such equipment in the federal district court for the District of Columbia.

In the New Mexico house, Speaker George W. Armijo, Sr., is the author of a bill to bar Bank Night.

The Florida legislature is expected to listen to appeals for legalization of the game. Representative Peter Tomasello of Okeechobee is preparing a legalization measure. Observers of the state situation feel that the game would probably be placed under the supervision of the State Racing Commission, if legalized. Frank Rogers, vice-president of the Sparks circuit, is on the commission.

The Connecticut legislature, meeting in Hartford, will soon consider a bill for legalization of cash award games, for "charitable purposes."

In Indiana, the popularity of Bingo in non-theatre properties has made exhibitors anxious for the success of anti-Bingo measures to be considered by the general assembly.

Sales Tax Issue

Missouri lawmakers are expected to consider a bill extending the two per cent sales tax.

In the adjoining state, Kansas, legislators have been mulling over a measure to eliminate the use of the two per cent sales tax tokens, and also over a bill taxing chain stores from $10 to $500.

In Wisconsin Governor Julius P. Heil recently proposed a "luxury" tax. Exhibitors fear such a bill, if it applies to theatre receipts, will be favorably acted upon by legislators, despite defeats in former legislatures.

Milwaukee theatremen are studying a proposed ordinance to grant a tax on the first exemption of $4,000 valuation on homesteads, the consequent loss to be offset by imposition of a two per cent sales tax.

Ohio exhibitors have the pledge of the Governor-elect, John W. Bricker, to "avoid any new or increased taxes." The most important objective, Ohio theatre owners feel, is to maintain the admission tax at three per cent.

For Members Only, But——

In New Orleans, the conviction of Claude Derbes, secretary of the Little theatre, for failure to pay the two per cent amusement tax, will be appealed. The management says the showings are for entertainment of members only.

Sunday shows in Arkansas may become a reality if a bill introduced at Little Rock by Senator Frierson is adopted.

The citizenry of Smithfield, N. C., voted three to one against Sunday screen programs.

Georgia Representative Ed Wohlwender has submitted a measure making it a misdemeanor for theatre owners to offer a pass to a member of the legislature while it is in session.

Alderman Harry Devine in Milwaukee's council has named a committee of five citizens to study the "effects of lengthy film programs on the health of children." The inquiry primarily concerns double feature bills, and was prompted by parent-teachers associations and women's clubs.

Parking Space in Specifications

In Ontario, the legislators soon will hold hearings on a bill asking for a building regulation requiring new theatres to include specifications of parking places for patrons.

In the New York legislative body, in session at Albany, Republican Assemblyman Robert J. Crews introduced a bill, backed by the American Federation of Labor and its subsidiary, the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, prohibiting unlicensed persons from operating, or threading, any motion picture projector. Theatre owners or managers would be barred from asking projectionists to leave the room while on duty, or to do any other kind of work.

Mr. Crews told the Motion Picture Herald representative that he believed his bill might pass this year; it was killed last year in the Rules Committee.

New York laboratories' objections are expected to be overcome by amendments to the bill, restricting its application to theatres.

Three bills also were introduced in the New York lawmaking body, providing for the licensing, under the State Department of Labor, of fee charging employment agencies, and intended to "purify" them of fraudulent practices. The bills exempt those employment agencies "owned, operated or controlled" by a corporation which directly or through subsidiaries operates 20 or more theatres.

Agitation in New York State against outdoor billboards is reaching a climax in a publicity campaign and in the introduction by Senator C. Tracey Stagg and Assemblywoman Jane Todd, of a bill embodying such a ban.

Legislators See "Grand Illusion"

Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives attended a special screening of "Grand Illusion" at the Belasco theatre in Washington. The picture, made by Jean Renoir in France, is being distributed in this country by World Films.

Name Eastman Directors

Paul S. Achilles, managing director of the Psychological Corporation, and Raymond N. Ball, president of the Lincoln-Alliance Bank & Trust Company, Rochester, N. Y., have been elected to the directorate of Eastman Kodak Company. They will fill the vacancies caused by the deaths of Francis R. Hart and Dr. Rush Rhees.

Ed Fay has booked the entire cast of the WHN Refugee Theatre of the Air into his Fay's Theatre, in Providence, the engagement to begin this Friday. The performers are all refugees. Their appearances until now have been entirely on the air.

More Film Series On Americanism

Added to the several series of motion picture shorts on "Americanism" and patriotism already released or planned is a group of 50 on the Constitution of the United States announced last week in New York by Mrs. Timothy Kenney, wealthy widow of an early leader in the development of hydro-electric and steam power, and still another series from Warner Bros.

Mrs. Kenney has organized Kendor Productions, with headquarters in the RCA Building, Rockefeller Center, to conduct a non-profit project for the production of patriotic films for showing in schools, clubs and elsewhere as a means of "combatting Communist and Nazi propaganda in the United States."

First on Benjamin Franklin

The first of the 50, dealing with Benjamin Franklin, was shown last Friday afternoon to an invited audience of club women, heads of patriotic organizations, newspaper men and others, in the Chanin Building auditorium in New York, where Mrs. Kenney announced that through the films she hopes to "awaken the public to a realization of their heritage and to the insidious dangers that threaten it."

Mrs. Kenney said that she expects support from labor unions, patriotic societies, business organizations and civic groups, with actual cost of production coming from a "nickel-and-dime" collection among those groups and the general public, administered by a group of business men. Projectors would be lent to private groups and the subjects made available to theatres wherever requested. Prints would be made both in 35mm and 16mm.

Warners Invites Leaders

One hundred American educators, historians, writers and editors have been invited by Warner Brothers to form a committee to select episodes in the history of the United States to be made into a new series of patriotic films.

The first acceptance was from Dr. Henry James Forman, author and editor. Dr. Forman, who edited Collier's magazine during the World War and has contributed to numerous other publications, served as a member of President Theodore Roosevelt's suite in the Russo-Japanese Peace Conference in 1905.

At the outset, the committee will be asked to determine the ten most significant events in American history, but Jack L. Warner indicated that the series may be extended beyond these. The Warner studio already has made such patriotic shorts as "Lincoln in the White House," "Declaration of Independence," "Man Without a Country" and "Give Me Liberty."

Approval of Warners' Americanism shorts was given this week by Eugene I. Van Antwerp, national commander-in-chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, after viewing them at the coast studios.

A national tieup has been effected by Filmack Trailer Company, Chicago, with the Veterans of Foreign Wars headquarters in Kansas City, Mo., whereby the VFW is sponsoring an official "Star Spangled Banner" singing reel released by Filmack. Warners and National Screen Service are distributing similar trailers to theatres.

The American Legion, in 300 of its forthcoming mass meetings throughout the country, during National Defense Week, which starts on February 12, will show five Warner shorts: "Declaration of Independence," "The Romance of Louisiana," "The Man Without a Country," "Give Me Liberty," and "Lincoln in the White House."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Clearing the Way

Settling down to serious business, Hollywood started seven pictures last week, and, clearing the decks for intensive future action, removed ten pictures from the stages and location sites. There are a few potentially promising pictures in the started and finished work.

Pictures Started

Two productions were started at RKO-Radio, where attention is almost exclusively concentrated on the forthcoming premiere of "Gunga Din." However, with George O'Brien as the star, "A Knight in Ghost Town" went before the cameras. The support will include Rosalind Keith, Ray Whitley, Chill Wills, Ward Bond and Monty Montague. Sally Eilers and Allan Lane will be featured in the second picture, "They Made Me a Spy."

MGM put two picture in work. The familiar cast principals, Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Fay Holden, Cecilia Parker, Ann Rutherford and Sara Haden, will be seen in "The Hardys Ride High."

"Tarzan in Exile," first "Tarzan" film the studio has made in two years, will present Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan, Henry Wilcoxon, Frieda Inescort and John Sheffield.

The third studio to start two pictures was Universal. The cast for "The Spirit of Culver" will be headed by Jackie Cooper, Freddie Bartholomew, Gene Reynolds and Andy Devine. Preston Foster, Irene Hervery and Regis Toomey will be seen in "Key Woman."

For Grand National distribution, Fine Arts Pictures started "Curio Cipher." It will feature Charlotte Wynters, Leon Ames, Weldon Heyburn, Sidney Miller, Adrienne Ames and William von Brincken.

Features Finished

Monogram completed three pictures. Tex Ritter heads the cast in "Rollin' Westward," in which will also be seen Horace Murphy, Dorothy Fay, Karl Hackett, Charles King, Dave O'Brien, Bob Terry and Hank Worden. "Sky Pirate" will feature John Trent, Milburn Stone, Marjorie Reynolds and Jason Robards, with Pete Lynn, Lucien Littlefield, Polly Ann Young, Sayre Deering, Tommy Bupp and Betsy Gray. In "Star Reporter," Warren Hull, Marsha Hunt, Virginia Howell, Clay Clement, Morgan Wallace and Paul Fix will be seen.

Three pictures were also marked off the active list at Columbia. The principals in "Sabotage," a Larry Darmour production, are Jack Holt, Katherine DeMille, Ralph Morgan, C. Henry Gordon and Regis Toomey. Robert Paige and Richard Fiske share the lead roles in "Flying G-Men," with James Craig, Lorna Gray, Don Beddoe, Forbes Murray and Dick Curtis in support. Most important of the company's trio of pictures is "Let Us Live," with Henry Fonda, Maureen O'Sullivan, Ralph Bellamy, Martin Spellman, Stanley Ridges, Alan Baxter and Henry Kolker.

Republic finished two films. "Ridin' the Range" will present Gene Autry with Smiley Burnette, June Storey, George Cleveland, Jack Mulhall, Walter Miller, Gordon Hart, Ethan Laidlaw, Jack Ingram, Earl Hodgins and Hal Price. The principals in "Forged Passport" are Paul Kelly, June Lang, Lyle Talbot, Billy Gilbert, Cliff Nazarro and Maurice Murphy.

At MGM "Huckleberry Finn" was finished. Mickey Rooney is the star, with the feature support cast including Walter Connolly, William Frawley, Rex Ingram, Lynne Carver, Jo Ann Sayers, Minor Watson, Elizabeth Risdon, Victor Kilian, Clara Blandick and Irving Bacon.

Victory's "Code of the Cactus" will star Tim McCoy with Ben Corbett, Dorothy Short, Ted Adams, Alden Chase, Dave O'Brien, Forrest Taylor, Bob Terry, Slim Whittaker and Frank Wayne.

Spring Epics

Motion picture houses are in for a wave of historical "epics" this spring and summer.

Hollywood has turned to the history books and romantic historical novels, and is busily romanticizing great lives and important events out of the past. Picturesque backgrounds will cover the ages from the jousting tournaments of Camelot, across the ocean to pioneer America, and beyond to the wilds of India and Australia, with a few side excursions into the burning deserts and jungles as well as into the frozen north.

Here's a partial list. From Paramount will come "Union Pacific," "The Knights of the Round Table," "Beau Geste" and "Ruler of the Seas." Twentieth Century-Fox already has "Jesse James" on advance exhibition, and "The Life of Alexander Graham Bell" and "Stanley and Livingston" is in the immediate offing.

RKO-Radio's major contribution will be "Gunga Din," and from Warners will come "Juarez," "The Oklahoma Kid" and "Dodge City," with a remake of "The Sea Hawk" considered. Columbia is making "Plane No. 4," a story of the air mail. Samuel Goldwyn will do "The Last Frontier," which concerns events in the Philippine Islands after the United States took over. Republic is busy with "Man of Conquest." Hal Roach has in work "Captain Fury," the background of which is Australia. And, without wanting to bore anybody by repetition, David O. Selznick says he will get underway with "Gone with the Wind" almost any day now.

Legends and Fables

Last year, with "The Adventures of Robin Hood," Hollywood made its first invasion in a long time into the realm of legend and fable. The first 1939 consideration of legend and fable as desirable screen material will be made by Paramount with "Knights of the Round Table" as the subject.

The picture will be produced by Albert Lewin from a story written by Talbot Jennings, whose credits include participation in the preparation of "Mutiny on the Bounty," "Romeo and Juliet," "The Good Earth" and "Marie Antoinette," all of which required a great deal of literary and historical research. The film will be directed by Henry Hathaway and will star Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

In "Knights of the Round Table" the younger Fairbanks, whose immediate future picture is "Gunga Din," will be following in the footsteps of his father, who achieved his greatest fame in portraying swashbuckling roles. He will be cast as Lancelot, King Arthur's strong right arm and romantic swashbuckling hero.

Wings of the Navy

(Warner-Cosmopolitan)

Aviation, National Defense, Americanism and News

It isn't in the calendar that Warner Brothers could have known last spring, when they started production of this picture, that the President of the United States would be urging the Seventy-sixth Congress to appropriate billions for strengthening the nation's air force and warning via international radio broadcast of the urgent need for same at the precise moment when "Wings of the Navy" should come up for release.

But if it had been in the calendar for the Brothers Warner to know this in advance, they would have produced exactly this film. It fits the national and international situation, the newspaper headlines of the world and the box office needs of the American exhibitor like a glove fits a fist.

"Wings of the Navy" was produced at the Naval air bases at Pensacola, Florida, and San Diego, California, with the Navy cooperating fully and with manifest relish in the job.

Warner actors, good ones with plenty of name value and talent, played out the personal romance which holds attention between presentations and demonstrations of Navy air strength, equipment and technique, but the romance is, as a screen notation might accurately have put it, "purely coincidental." The presence of such players as George Brent, Olivia de Havilland, John Payne, Frank McHugh and the others listed below affords marquee means of getting the rank and file into the theatre in paying numbers, but it is the background material, the sensible and generous exposition of the Navy's air force in all its aspects, that the rank and file may be expected to thrill to and go out talking about.

Words are no match for lenses when it comes to describing the flight stuff in this or any picture, so don't accept these as even faintly indicative of what goes on aerially, in "Wings of the Navy." Shown in incredibly exact formation are fighting squadrons photographed from eagles' eyeview. Shown in precise ground array are the Navy's planes, a sight which would have been impressively reassuring to Americans before the Chief Executive told the Congress how few of them, relatively, there are. It is a sight, now, likely to send citizens home intent upon writing to their Congressman about the need for more and more and more.

Shown, too, is the test flight of a new pursuit ship, the death of the test pilot, and, later, the successful test of the same type ship by another pilot. This impresses observers with the life-and-death earnestness with which the Navy's preparations for national defense go quietly forward. And, late in the picture, cross-section shots of a mammoth air cruiser drive home, by detailed display of intricate apparatus in function, the important fact that combat planes cost a great deal of money.

Worked into the picture, also, and this on due deliberation after it had been brought in, is a Brazilian aviation cadet taught his profession at the Pensacola flying school as a courtesy student, the first screened response of a motion picture studio to the nation's lead in the matter of Pan-American cooperation for defense.

To say that any aviation picture is better than any other aviation picture is to invite expert testimony and get nowhere. However, to say that this one is the most timely aviation picture that ever came off the line is to state the truth mildly. It is not simply an aviation picture, or merely a service picture, or a newspaper-headline attraction, a national defense feature or a documentary film. It is all of these, plus a fictional romance, but it is, in sum and in the Warner scheme of things, an Americanism picture. It is also very hot box office.

Lloyd Bacon directed the picture for associate producer Lou Edelman and neither let the incidental story, an original screen play by Michael Fessier, get in his way as they went about telling the big story of the Navy's air setup. They don't preach, eulogize or argue, but the facts they present do. (The romance is the one in which a nice girl engaged to one of two brothers and loving the other worries a lot about it until the one she's engaged to finds out about the situation and tells her it's all right with him if she switches.)

Previewed at Warner's Hollywood theatre with everybody of importance in Hollywood and large numbers of those important in the Navy, the Army and the Marine Corps in attendance. The picture took them as Grant is said to have taken Richmond and as everybody present seemed to think the United States could take any invader that happened to come along—if the United States had enough planes and pilots like those seen on the screen. —WILLIAM R. WEAVER.

Horse Racing Melodrama

The "sport of the kings" is the main theme of the story, romance is secondary by only a small percentage. The story details the enmity of two families and their rivalry on the tracks of the country, and builds to the melodramatic events that involve the principals in the big race.

The picture stars Ralph Byrd and Mary Carlisle, but Robert Allen has an equally important role as the suitor in competition with Byrd. In the support are George Hayes, Marvin Stephens and Charles Wilson. The picture was directed by Sidney Salkow from the screen play by Wellyn Totman.

The "Bogart" family becomes interested in horse racing, forces the "Montrose" family into bankruptcy and buys up the estate and stables. "Greg Bogart" offers help to "Marian Montrose" but she refuses. "Queen," sold to a milk company, bears a colt sired by the famous "Battleguard." The "Montroses" raise the colt. A broken leg mends perfectly. "Queen" and a "Bogart" horse, also a son of "Battleguard," are entered in the derby. A gambler attempts to put the race on "ice" by kidnapping "Gramp Montrose." "Ben Marshall," doctor, and "Greg" join forces and free "Gramp" while the "Montrose" horse, "Sweet Revenge," goes on to victory.

Ambush

Melodrama

On a quiet Friday night in a preview-weary Hollywood this unballyhooed melodrama flipped onto the screen in front of tired professional eyes and, to strain the vernacular, knocked them out. In as fine a straightaway telling as any picture, big or little, has received in ready memory, the story of a bank robbery and its perpetrators' flight from justice builds up more suspense than producers commonly buy for a million dollars and sustains it longer than they hope to for twice as much. For purposes of plain entertainment, "Ambush" is a picture rarely matched, in its kind, and possibly never surpassed.

The showman's job in connection with the film is to get the public in to see it the first time, a job which resourceful showmen may be expected to do somewhat better than the fellow who makes it a practice to splatter names across his marquee, turn on the lights and wait for the fans to rush in. Gladys Swarthout's name is reputed to have lost some of its early allure, and it is a fact that she doesn't sing in this picture. Lloyd Nolan's name means more than it used to, but still isn't Valentino. Ernest Truex is a draw among persons who like his puckish brand of humor, but he plays a sinister gang leader here. Perhaps the most profitable tack a showman may take is to declare, loudly, that everybody changes type this time and outplays himself in the new setup.

Laura and S. J. Perelman's screen play, from Robert Ray's story, is an unvarnished account of an extremely well planned bank robbery and the robbers' extremely well planned means of escape. Kurt Neuman's direction is businesslike, plain and conditioned to no stereotyped ideas about how crime pictures should be made. William H. Wright produced the film with never a bow to the formalities of the type and with seeming fidelity to the facts about police detection as revealed in study of case histories.

This is not a story to be told in synopsis. There are four bandits in the gang, a brainy leader, a ruthless killer, a brutish dimwit and a weak but inventive youngster. A girl employed by the bank and a truck driver whose conveyance is needed for escape are taken into the gang's custody and forced to aid in the flight. These two fall in love before it's all over, but their romance doesn't clutter up the progress of the action. There are no dumbbell detectives and no phenomenally clever ones, no wisecracking yeggs, smart aleck reporters or big shot lawyers. It's a straight story, registering, a good deal more convincingly than the fancy ones do, the fact that crime does not pay.

The robbery takes places in a large city, which is not named, and the bandits flee to open country, also vaguely designated. The time is now or any time. The entertainment is constant, substantial and legitimate.

Arrest Bulldog Drummond

(Paramount)

That Man's Here Again

Another chapter from the life saga of the fictionized super-man brings Captain Hugh C. Drummond into conflict with a couple of symptoms of the times, a death dealing machine and a band of international spies. The menace may change its nationality and method of attack, but the rounds of the battle still pack violent deaths, rough and tumble fist fights and hair-thin escapes, a series of climaxes.

What is approaching a stock cast of players assumes familiar roles. John Howard is still the sleuthing Briton, while Heather Angel performs as the long suffering fiancee, "Phyllis." Reginald Denny and E. E. Clive are the comic foils. H. B. Warner represents the law, George Zucco and Jean Fenwick the other side. The direction of the screen play by Stuart Palmer from a H. C. (Sapper) McNeile original is by James Hogan and a creditable job it is except for a hurried finale, perhaps dictated by running time.

The oft postponed nuptials of "Bulldog" and "Phyllis" are sidetracked again when an inventor of a detonating ray machine, which can cause munitions to explode by remote control, is found murdered. Caught on the scene, the Captain goes about collecting clues to clear his own name and protect the life of his fiancee. "Phyllis" is sent on a cruise and "Bulldog" becomes apprehensive when he learns that the murderer and his confederate are on the same boat. A plane takes Bulldog to the rescue.

You Can't Get Away With Murder

(Warner Bros.)

Crime Melodrama

"You Can't Get Away with Murder" preaches that crime doesn't pay. It does so grimly, forcefully, and in a way which teaches a powerful moral lesson. The basic plot concerns a hoodlum—worshipping youngster, a thoroughly bad yegg, and an innocent man convicted of murder. Founded on a play by Sing Sing's famous warden, Lewis E. Lawes, and written in collaboration with Jonathan Finn, with the screen play by Robert Buckney, Don Ryan and Kenneth Gamet, directed by Lewis Seiler, the picture features Humphrey Bogart and Billy Halop in vivid roles which they play for all the parts are worth.

Influenced by "Wilson," "Johnnie Stone" participates in petty crimes without detection until a pawnshop holdup results in murder. "Wilson" kills with a gun stolen by "Johnnie" from his sister "Madge's" sweetheart, Burke. Circumstantial evidence sends him to the death-house, and "Johnnie," terrorized by "Wilson," goes to jail with him for another crime. As "Madge" and other friends wage a battle to save "Burke," "Wilson" plans to rid himself of the kid, who might talk, by killing him in an attempted jailbreak.

"Johnnie," both frightened and case-hardened, turns a deaf ear to all pleas that might help "Burke," until, shot by "Wilson," he mouths a dying confession that removes "Burke" from the shadow of the electric chair and places "Wilson" there.

Grim but not gruesome, while potent in its picturization of desperate men bent on dangerous missions, the show carries a strong human interest appeal. Void of any comedy save that from jail birds, carrying only the slightest love interest, "You Can't Get Away with Murder" is both melodramatic entertainment and a gripping moral document.

The showmanship required to sell the picture is a straight-from-the-shoulder delivery of facts. While the theme and story should bear the brunt of exploitation efforts, recent pictures in which Humphrey Bogart and Billy Halop have appeared should be called to the public's attention. The audience witnessing the preview had just seen "King of the Underworld" and consequently was in a mood for more of the same brand of entertainment. It was evident that the patrons were impressed.

Son of Frankenstein

Melodrama

"Son of Frankenstein" is the sequel to "Frankenstein," and it is a parallel story in which by reason of this circumstance, the entertaining and commercial value of terrorizing surprise has worn thin. Most everybody knows the original Mary W. Shelley "Frankenstein" story. Exhibitors are few and far between who don't know the sensational history of the picture evolved therefrom by the Universal of the Laemmle era.

Yet, assuming from reports anent the recent revivals of "Frankenstein" that there is a continuing public market for unadulterated gruesomeness and horror on the screen, "Son of Frankenstein" has considerable value in its own right. This picture starts, a generation later, from the point where its sire finished. The memory of the horror provoked by the man-made monster still endures when "Baron Frankenstein," his wife and son, arrive at the ancestral home to claim his father's estate. The monster lives, too, cared for by awesome "Ygor," legally dead but still alive. "Frankenstein" gives the piece of unearthly humanity new animation and, under "Ygor's" direction, the monster becomes his avenging instrument. Two brutal murders serve to panic and terrorize the populace, and "Frankenstein's" safety is menaced. Still he persists in fostering the brute, to prove that his father might have stumbled on the secret of creating artificial life, until "Ygor" and the monster threaten his child. Then, first killing "Ygor," he destroys the monster forever.

Artistically, "Son of Frankenstein" is a masterpiece in the demonstration of how production settings and effects can be made assets emphasizing literary melodrama. Histrionically, the picture is outstanding because of the manner in which Basil Rathbone, Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi and Lionel Atwill, as well as the members of the supporting cast, sink their teeth into their roles.

Everything in the picture is grim. The single pleasant note is the final destruction of the monster. That "Son of Frankenstein" is horror to the last degree is widely known. Audiences will know what to expect.

Previewed in Universal studio projection room in Hollywood. Two press representatives, including the writer, sat in the same room about eight years ago when "Frankenstein" first was shown and when the Laemmles, Senior and Junior, did not know what to do about it. Nobody present on the eve of Friday, the 13th, had any doubts about what the present Universal regime and its exhibitor clientele would do about "Son of Frankenstein."—G. M.

Code of the Fearless

(Spectrum)

Western

Hard-riding, gun-play and hand-to-hand encounters, with songs by the star and a modicum of romance combine to make "Code of the Fearless" a film calculated to satisfy the western adherents.

Fred Scott, the "silvery voiced buckaroo," who was an opera star in San Francisco, has the starring role. Claire Rochelle is the girl. Others are John Marton, Walter McGrail and Harry Harvey.

The picture is the first of a series to be produced by C. C. Burr for Spectrum. It was directed by Raymond K. Johnson.

Scott plays "Fred Jamison," a ranger. With the consent of "Captain Rawlins," his superior, "Fred" pretends to resign from the ranger service, as a part of a plan to rid the countryside of "Red Kane." "Fred" makes plans to round up the "Kane" gang in a fake holdup. "Red" and "Fred" fight it out and a posse captures the others.

Ride 'Em Cowgirl

(Grand National)

Western

A new personality in the western field, Dorothy Page, makes her debut in the first of a series in which she will star. Heretofore the female element in westerns has been strictly confined to romantic roles.

The singing cowgirl hails from Pennsylvania but learned western ways in the state of many western traditions, Texas. She has appeared as a singer with the Paul Whiteman band and also as a sustaining artist on the radio.

Structurally the film is no different from the average picture of its type. It combines action-fist fights, gun-fights, chases and a horse race, cowboy fashion, with singing, comedy and romance, while Miss Page contributes to all but the fist fights and the comedy.

The story lacks an outstanding climax, but it does have action, and its acceptance probably will rest with the fans' reaction to a feminine western star.

"Sandy Doyle," gambler, who has been mining silver on the Mexican side of the border and hiding the silver on the Bar X ranch on the American side, seeks ownership of the ranch owned by "Rickson." When "Rickson" becomes indebted to "Sandy" and is framed by the gambler, he faces a jail term and the loss of the ranch.

"Helen Rickson" (Dorothy Page), to save her father, "confesses" the theft and escapes. With the aid of "Oliver Shea" she eludes the sheriff, wins the annual rodeo race and exposes the gambler.

Miss Page sings "A Campfire, a Prairie Moon and You," and "I Love the Wide Open Spaces," which were composed by Al Sherman and Walter Kent.

Snowy, the horse

Old Bones of the River

(Gainsborough-G.F.D.)

African Comedy

Based on the Edgar Wallace "Sanders" stories, this latest Will Hay subject rises very inventively above its foundations. For purposes of character comedy the schoolmaster comedian herewith is transplanted to the Africa of "Sanders of the River" and cast into the turmoil of tribal outbreaks stimulated by illicit hootch. It is a long way from Wallace, and though the whole action turns on a supposedly dramatic motif, the native unrest, the Hay comedy never has been more boisterous, unsubtle and indisciplined. The fun, which is devised mainly around the decrepit steamer run by Moore Marriott, as a venerable imbecile, and Graham Moffatt, as a perky boy, the rude interludes with the tribesmen, the general variation on the theme of "tumblery and tossage" and the noisy pitch at which nearly every scene is handled, indicates a direct appeal to the frankly unsophisticated audience and the patron with whom Will Hay is still a major prophet. It is a directly local market appeal and it would seem that Hay's sponsors have done little to widen that market.

Hay's role is that of Professor Benjamin Tibbetts, a crusty and fumbling old pedagogue who takes over charge of an African administration when Commissioner Sanders goes sick with fever. His adventures take him into a blood battle between tribal chiefs, one of them using bathtub gin as means to his end. Much of the slapstick takes place on the battered and decripit riverboat Zaire, involves the receipt of orodous goats in lieu of taxes, finds Hay saddled with a black baby saved from the sacrificial altar, and ends with an abortive attack on the Residency.

Hay is rather more boisterous and verbose than usual, and few of his lines are really funny. His stooges, Messrs. Marriott and Moffatt, are to type, and probably bag as many laughs as "Dr. Tibbetts," if not more.

The African atmosphere is not badly stimulated even if the ethnography is somewhat lacking in authority. There is one Negro actor, Robert Adams, whose Bosambo is almost a convincing characterization.

British exhibitors should find it easy to sell this one on its star handle, and can exploit it as a species of leg pull at the expense of "Sanders of the River." For the wider market it is more likely to restrict Hay's appeal than otherwise.

Seen in London at a trade preview. The audience quite obviously found it easy to laugh at the comedy passages, but some laughed at those in more dramatic vein. As a Hay specimen its salability seemed not to be difficult though there was a general impression that it did not live up to the recognized standard.—AUBREY FLANAGAN.

LaVierge Folle

(Walch Film Corp.)

French Melodrama

The eternal triangle is again the theme in "LaVierge Folle" (The Foolish Virgin). Produced in France by Le Film d'Art and taken from the play by Henry Bataille, the picture introduces Juliette Faber, who combines beauty and acting ability.

The picture follows the lines of French farce and several scenes and parts of the dialogue are at least "intimate."

The photography, action and acting are audience values and the superimposed English titles keep it all moving along.

"Diane" (Juliette Faber), French debutante, and "Marcel" (Victor Francen), wealthy but elderly lawyer, fall in love. "Marcel" explains to his wife "Fanny" (Annie Ducaux), but she refuses to give him a divorce. "Diane" and "Marcel" plan to go to Egypt to get it. "Diane's" brother traces them to the boat and "Diane" is accidentally shot and killed.

With the supporting cast of Gabrielle Dorziat, who played the school principal in "40 Little Mothers," Annie Dacaux, Michel Andre, Henri Guisol and Denise Kerny, the picture is well balanced.

Reviewed at an early evening performance at the new Cinema 49 in New York, the audience received the picture warmly.—GEORGE SPIRES.

IN COURTS

Paramount Files Action To Halt Contract Suit

Paramount Pictures, Inc., has filed suit in New York supreme court to restrain Ben Blumenthal from prosecuting an action for an undisclosed amount against it in England charging breach of a contract in connection with the sale of Paramount-controlled theatres there.

Paramount claimed that it was served in New York December 27th with a writ returnable on January 24th, issued from an English court, which charged it with failing to remunerate Mr. Blumenthal on the sale of English theatres, and with violating an agreement to sell the theatres to a purchaser obtained by Mr. Blumenthal.

Reach Settlement In Rose Action

A stipulation has been filed in the United States district court in New York settling the plagiarism suit brought by Henry Rose against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, MGM Distributing Corporation, Loew's, Inc., and Culver Export Corporation. The terms of the settlement were not disclosed. Mr. Rose brought suit in August, 1937, for an injunction and damages, saying the defendants had plagiarized his play, "Burrow, Burrow," copyrighted on July 3, 1934, in the picture, "Man of the People."

Disney Seeks Injunction In Kansas City Court

John W. Hudson, attorney for Walt Disney Productions, and the Hamilton Enterprises, Inc., Missouri corporation, have filed suit in federal district court in Kansas City against A. E. Sandhaus (the Great States Manufacturing Company and the Colonial Sales and Novelty Company of Kansas City) N. E. Sandhaus, Great States Operating Company, Crown Drug Company, Phil Small and John Small (Parkview Pharmacies) and Milgram Food Stores, Inc.

The suit asks that these companies and individuals be permanently enjoined from displaying and selling replicas of Mickey Mouse and other Disney creations through vending machines, and that defendants pay $1 for each infringed copy made and for each of the figures which appear on the vending machines.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Newspapers in and around New York the other morning featured stories of the loud, mysterious noise which alarmed residents of the Park Slope section in Brooklyn, reporting on how the United States Coast Guard and United States Navy Yard and the United States Weather Man and the seismologist at Fordham University all were unable to explain the apparent scientific phenomenon. But Leonard Lyons, in the New York Evening Post, pierced the mystery, or thought he did, announcing in his column that, "if all these agencies had checked at the office of the United Artists Corporation, the mystery would have been solved. It was a publicity stunt for the movie at the Music Hall—the movie, 'Trade Winds.'"

United Artists had no more to do with the big noise than Mr. Lyons' explanation. The first U. A. knew about it was when the staff read about it in the newspapers the next morning. U. A.'s press agents merely dropped a quiet word here and there that is was a "stunt" for "Trade Winds." And Mr. Lyons obliged.

United Artists, however, did get some unique attention for "Topper Takes a Trip," at the Music Hall. The idea, not really a new one, sent 20 U. A. employees into as many New York hotels, all carrying the required baggage, and all duly registering under the name "Cosmo Topper." Within an hour, and every hour on the hour thereafter during the day, United Artists' home office switchboard operators telephoned each hotel and asked to have paged the registered Cosmo Toppers, leaving the message that "Marion Kirby was waiting for Mr. Topper at the Music Hall." Cosmo and Marion, of course, are characters in "Mr. Topper Takes a Trip," and at some of the hostelries the next day the 20 U.A. Cosmo Toppers had no easy job retrieving their baggage under the stony eyes of annoyed house detectives.

Having some professional interest, we checked into the decease of a resident of upstate New York, only to find the Little Falls Evening Times reporting in his obituary that the man, "an electrical inventor, had 150 parents."

And then there was the unwitting critical candor from the columns of the University Daily, Kansas:

> "Miss Irene Peabody, mezzo-soprano, sang 'In a Manger Lowly', accompanied by Waldemar Geltch. Miss Peabody must have taken the song literally, for she sang very 'lowly' while the Messrs. Geltch and Anderson soured to new heights."

The Filmgoer, in Brussels, reported quite clearly on the personal appearance of Danielle Darrieux at Brussels' Metropole Cinema, on the occasion of the premiere of her latest French film, "Retour a l'Aube." "Her youthful beauty and slender figure were the envy of members of her own sex," observed The Filmgoer, "if one may judge from the catty remarks heard on coming out of the Cinema."

Noticing Walt Disney's Hal Horne entering a Rockefeller Center elevator on his way to his office the other morning with a bowl of smoking tobacco in a pipe that was worn down at the rim, A-Mike Vogel, of our Managers' Round Table department, solicitously sent down to Mr. Horne one of his favorite corn cob smokerinos which he gets by the gross from Missouri.

"The moment your corn cob gift arrived," Mr. Horne wrote back to Mr. Vogel, "I sent out for a plate of hot melted butter, smeared it on the outside and started munching away, only to find that, so far as the kernels were concerned, you must have been there first."

"On looking at the contraption a little further," Mr. Horne continued, "I decided that if I filled it with my best Sailor Plug and put a match to it, the experience might be worth while. I put a match to it and—well, anyway, Mike, drop in and see me here at the hospital—they tell me they won't be able to put me together again for a month. Seems that I was wrong about the kernels not being on the pipe. I smoked it half way down and the thing started to pop all over the place. Are you sure it was a pipe—or was it a firecracker?"

Exhibitors and exchangemen in and around Milwaukee may now call Western Union day or night and have a messenger deliver a 10 or 20 or 30-cent chunk of ice quicker than they can say "my ginger ale is getting warm."

Catching up on some of our back reading we happened across trade writer Ed Harrison's interesting array of items published under the caption: "What the Newsreels Never Show," about the American newsreels' self-censoring of pictorial incidents the screening of which might prove embarrassing to celebrities.

Among the mentionable self-censored newsreel eliminations was a Pathe News shot of President Roosevelt describing with gestures how a roadside gardener had thumbed his nose at him, and the incident that occurred at a little ceremony where Vice-president Garner and Speaker Bankhead were congratulating Justice Hugo Black, then newly-appointed to the U. S. Supreme Court. Mr. Garner jokingly said to Mr. Black, "If anything ever happens, I'll know where to go when I want the right decision," and those words, of course went onto the sound tracks.

Newsreels generally avoid use of pictures that might ridicule or embarrass famous persons. For this reason you don't see King Victor Emanuel of Italy, who is slightly taller than a midget, being lifted onto his horse. Nor the tiny chair, especially built for him, that stands in his box at the opera in Rome. Pershing had trouble with his false teeth while talking before the newsreel camera. And Edward, now the Duke of Windsor, was caught by the newsreel camera tripping over a sound cable with a comic effect that would have done credit to any Hollywood slapstick player.

Theatre owners, whether prospective new builders or others, who are contemplating the adoption of the name "World's Fair" for their theatre, to mark the New York World's Fair opening in April, should note that Grover Whalen, the Fair generalissimo, is suing places of business which are using the words "World's Fair."

A saloon on Third Avenue in New York, another in Jackson Heights not far from the Fair on Long Island, and a beauty parlor and barber in Forest Hills, L. I., already have been served in suits through which Mr. Whalen seeks to enjoin use of the Fair name, on the grounds that it constitutes "unfair and unlawful competition." A special New York state law permits the Fair to take such action.

P. S.: Mr. Whalen is going to serve beer at the Fair across a 120-foot long bar, and probably will have his own assortment of beauty parlors and barber shops.

Artplus Hosiery, D. Hess, president, announces that Warner Bros. Pictures have signed a contract whereby all of their female stars and feature players will wear Artplus hosiery in all Warner Bros. productions—whether they want to or not.

The practice of using "doubles"—inexpensive players who resemble costly stars and impersonate them when something dangerous has to be done—is an old story in Hollywood. But Sam Goldwyn has now taken a new step forward, a bold step, using doubles even for vegetation. He's reproducing the Yorkshire moors on the hills of California for "Wuthering Heights," and in the long shots good old Anglo-Saxon heather is being simulated by good old California tumble weeds sprinkled with good old purple-painted sawdust.

"Deanna Durbin found out all about the glories and miseries of horseback riding in the course of making her latest Universal picture, 'That Certain Age.'" reports the Brussels, Belgium Filmgoer.

Bet none of the secretaries of the multi-million-dollar movie companies can boast of a full-fledged bar with all the trimmings like the one Madeline White has in Ray Johnston's secretarial office at Monogram.

Harry Blair, of Gordon White's publicity staff at Grand National, worked feverishly traveling around New York's newspaper offices the day the company signed Maxie Baer, the former heavyweight champion prizefighter, for six western films. "That's some accomplishment," quoth Harry to the newspaper editors, and the New York Sun replied with a big headline: "Baer Reformed About 50 Per Cent—Boxer Is No Longer Merry Madcap."

Anyway, westerns for Grand National will be a lot easier than fighting on the eyes of Max (Call Me Buck) Baer.

Pride of the Navy

(Republic)

Romance and Action

For names this feature makes available the values of James Dunn, Rochelle Hudson, Gordon Oliver, Horace MacMahon, Gordon Jones, Charlotte Winters, Joseph Crehan and Charles Trowbridge. For audience entertainment purposes it is a combination of triangle romance, comedy and action.

A different phase of naval activity serves as a background. While a considerable portion of the running time is devoted to the conflict between a grandstanding speed boat driver and a serious-minded Naval lieutenant for the affections of an admiral's daughter, those portions allotted to straightaway comedy and spectacular and exciting action give "Pride of the Navy" a quality which seemed to satisfy those attending the preview.

Unable to perfect a high speed, torpedo-carrying splinter boat, "Lieutenant Richards" is commissioned to obtain the aid of race boat driver "Brennan," once bounced from the Naval service. Immediately "Brennan" starts to chisel in on "Richards" girl, "Gloria." Attention given this phase of the story is contrasted by situation and character comedy, featuring a dumb mechanic, gloomy while work on the experiment proceeds the inevitable split between "Brennan" and "Richards" occurs, and the first test run of the radically designed dual hull boat results disastrously. Inspired by patriotism and love for the girl, however, "Brennan" devises a perfected boat. Made ready for a surprise showing to a Congressional committee, the boat explodes a runaway war head torpedo, proves its military value and seaworthiness, and is accepted. "Brennan," who has no love for the Navy, accepts a reserve commission in order to marry "Gloria."

Previewed at the Forum theatre, Hollywood, the favorable reaction of the audience indicates that the film will have appeal to groups whose expectancies are not pitched too high. Supplementing the exploitation value of the cast names is the possibility of many novel ideas to gain the cooperation of the Navy and of patriotic units in the community.—G. M.

Cops Is Always Right

Popeye the Good Citizen

Popeye violates driving regulations on several counts and agreeably accepts tickets for all of his offenses. When he is not in the bad graces of the local constabulary, the salt is helping his girl friend, Olive, with her house cleaning. One sequence depicting how the strong armed gent changes the decorative scheme of two rooms is done in typically funny Popeye tradition. Auto drivers should have a good laugh at the troubles of Popeye with the traffic cop.—Running time, seven minutes.

I'm Just a Jitterbug

Lantz Cartune

This entertaining cartoon is replete with swing music and story book celebrities who go in for the "jitterbug" trend of dancing. The drawings bring to life such characters as "Old King Cole," "Jack and Jill" and "The Pied Piper."—Running time, 7 minutes.

Clyde Lucas and His Orchestra

Smooth Orchestration

The orchestral reputation of that smooth bandsman, Clyde Lucas, is agreeably demonstrated in this newest recital from the Melody Master concert category. The numbers include such widely scoped pieces as "Night over Shanghai," "Body and Soul," "Whistling Cowboy" and "When the Circus Comes to Town." The last named selection is presented by the ensemble in a diverting manner. Brother Lyn Lucas obliges with the vocal assignments.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Fox Hunt in the Roman Campagna

(United Artists)

Horsey Set a la Roman

The fable that the Eiglish traveler preserves the customs of the mother-country even to the point of dressing for dinner in the heart of the African veldt is given some substantiation in the depiction of a very British fox hunt held a good distance from the Britannic countryside around non-Albion terrain of Rome. Equipped with the customary personnel for such an enterprise, which includes a group of brightly costumed riders, handsome horse flesh and a collection of fleet hounds, the chase runs across some handsome hill country. Sportively the game as followed is not too thrilling, but, as shot by an inspired camera and tinted by some color conscious pigment wielders, the hunt becomes pictorially exhilarating. Even if the audience cannot be classified as members of the horsey set, gatherings who delight in eye-appealing entertainment should relish the color holiday afforded in the subject.—Running time, one reel.

Dog Gone Modern

A Doggy Short

The adventures of two inquisitive pups around a model home may be classified as trials descriptive of the routine of a dog's life. Their experiences with the very latest house cleaning devices are pictured in mildly amusing if not unexpected fashion. One hound makes an unfortunate acquaintances with an electric dishwasher. The other dog has his troubles with an automatic carpet sweeper and the results are more varied and amusing. Children and housewives will be interested in the home scene depictions.—Running time, seven minutes.

Football Romeo

Our Gang

Adolescent romance and the gridiron overtake the Our Gang juveniles. Alfalfa has a crush on Darla Hood but, believing that he can't compete with Butch, the athlete, decides to become a hermit. A hurried message from Darla starts him running towards the scene of the football game. Butch of course is on the opposing team. All Alfalfa does, with the help of a bit of deception on Darla's part, is to score a couple of touchdowns in a twinkling and win the game a la Merriwell. Running time, 10 minutes.

King Vulture

Exciting

A two-man expedition seeking eggs for a museum are photographed in sepia as they climb mountains and risk limbs and death to reach the nest of a vulture. The photography is excellent and captures the beauty of the Sierras, where the filming takes place. For thrills there are the exploits of the two men climbing the almost perpendicular face of the cliffs and the fight between one of the men and a king vulture over the invasion of the latter's nest. A News World of Sports special release, the narrative is by Jack Kofoed and described by Basil Ruysdael. Running time, 10½ minutes.

The Wrong Way Out

(MGM)

Youth Lecture

Most of the "Crime Doesn't Pay" subjects have dealt with a demonstration and conviction of adult crime life. Here the culprits are a pair of 'teen youngsters. The boy and the girl elope and after their marriage find work in a night club spot. After "rolling" a drunken customer, robbing and shooting a garage attendant, the boy is injured, and, while the girl goes for some medicine, the police close in. The lad runs his car into a truck and is killed; the girl is sent to prison. Mincing no words in its advice to the younger generation that it should think before it makes the matrimonial leap, the lecture becomes practical and important material for a screen showing to the whole family. Kenneth Howell and Linda Terry carry their roles competently.—Running time, 17 minutes.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

"BLONDIE": Penny Singleton, Arthur Lake—Good for family trade.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

HEADIN' EAST: Buck Jones, Ruth Coleman—Not a western but pleased just the same. Much different from the usual Jones feature and got by OK. Played December 9-10.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

HEROES OF THE ALAMO: Lane Chandler, Earl Hodgins—Used this on a double and was well received. The trailer on this is good. Would not play it as a single. Good on a double. Played December 23-24.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

I AM THE LAW: Edward G. Robinson—Great entertainment. Robinson never better and what a story. A picture that should click anywhere. Well produced. —J. K. Burgess, Iris Theatre, Velva, N. D. General patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS A WOMAN: Joan Blondell, Melvyn Douglas, Mary Astor, Frances Drake—For want of a better production we went back and picked up this old reliable and can assure you that the audience was not disappointed. Running time, 81 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

YOU CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU: Lionel Barrymore, James Stewart, Jean Arthur, Edward Arnold, Mischa Auer, Ann Miller, Spring Byington—A 100 per cent honey. The kind of picture that keeps the motion picture industry in the public's mind. How'm I doin', Mr. Capra Running time, 127 minutes. Played January 2-3.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

Conn

SECRETS OF CHINATOWN: Nick Stuart, Lucille Brown—Story and plot and acting very bad, indeed. Photography simply awful. Sound unbearable. This is one of the—in fact, the very worst picture that I have played in all my years in the theatre game. Running time, 52 minutes. Played January 2.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

First National

ANGELS WITH DIRTY FACES: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Ann Sheridan, Humphrey Bogart, "Crime School" Kids—This is one swell gangster picture which did good business. Play it quick. Played January 2-3.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

ANGELS WITH DIRTY FACES: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Ann Sheridan, "Dead End" Kids, Humphrey Bogart—After playing "Boy Meets Girl," I wouldn't have given a nickel for Cagney and O'Brien to come back and do business. But this picture is really something. It is tense, stark drama all through the picture, and all I have to say is, give these stars something that fits them, and they had in this picture. All three gave topnotch performances. So it did business as it deserved.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BROTHER RAT: Wayne Morris, Priscilla Lane, Jane Bryan—Swell entertainment for any spot. Will stand extended runs. Snappy and it clicks at the box office. What else could you want? Running time, 90 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

BROTHER RAT: Wayne Morris, Priscilla Lane, Jane Bryan—This is tops in entertainment for any kind of audience. Every member of the cast is excellent and the dialogue and situations are just as good. It didn't have the draw it should have, though. The fact that it was a hit on the stage didn't mean a thing here. Morris and Lane are very well liked. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 9-10.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

FOUR DAUGHTERS: Lane Sisters, Gale Page, Jeffrey Lynn, John Garfield, Claude Rains, May Robson—An excellent picture. Extended runs. Different, wonderful cast and will please all the family. Running time, 90 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

FOUR DAUGHTERS: Lane Sisters, Gale Page, Jeffrey Lynn, John Garfield, Claude Rains, May Robson—Excellent. A down-to-earth picture with a good story, good acting and good directing. Suitable on any day of the week. One of the big pictures of the year. Warner Bros. sure is hitting on high. If you are not using their product, you are missing a good bet. Running time, 94 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

GIRLS ON PROBATION: Ronald Reagan, Jane Bryan—A good picture! Running time, 63 minutes. Played January 5-6.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

Gaumont British

I WAS A SPY (reissue): Madeleine Carroll, Herbert Marshall—Thought this would be a good interesting picture with action, but from remarks gathered during and after the showing from the outside, the war angle killed it. People don't want to see anything connected with war. Take my tip and keep away from this if possible. If you can get them in they will like the story but that cannot be done if it was connected with the World War. Running time, 89 minutes. Played January 1-2.—Gerhard J. Abeln, State Theatre, Sauk Rapids, Minn. General patronage.

Grand National

LOVE TAKES FLIGHT: Bruce Cabot, Beatrice Roberts—Very fine little program picture, but I received a poor print. Don't be afraid of the production; it's OK.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

RENFREW ON THE GREAT WHITE TRAIL: James Newill, Terry Walker—A fine Canadian northwoods picture with the usual thrills and a good cast good on any day. Played December 18-19.—Gerhard J. Abeln, State Theatre, Sauk Rapids, Minn. General patronage.

SONG OF THE GRINGO: Tex Ritter, Joan Woodbury—Can safely say this was a humdinger. One of the best. Not a dull moment. Play it. Tex is a knockout. Played December 18-19.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

CHRISTMAS CAROL, A: Terry Kilburn, Reginald Owen—Very good offering for the holiday season.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

CITADEL, THE: Robert Donat, Rosalind Russell—This is a finished production that carried all the elements of drama that were incorporated in the widely read novel. There were not the usual long drawn out operating room scenes in it and Donat was tops in his role. It was well received and business above average on it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CROWD ROARS, THE: Robert Taylor, Maureen O'Sullivan, Lionel Stander, Frank Morgan, Edward Arnold—Splendid feature. Robert Taylor is as popular with the ladies here as he is in the cities, and they even seemed to enjoy the prize fight. Frank Morgan is good and Lionel Stander and Edward Arnold deserve special mention. Very good. Running time, 92 minutes. Played December 22-25.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CROWD ROARS, THE: Robert Taylor, Maureen O'Sullivan, Frank Morgan, Edward Arnold, Lionel Stander—A fine picture that should please everyone. Robert Taylor fits the he-man roles perfectly. Running time, 92 minutes. Played December 25-27.—M. D. Buxton, Garden Theatre, McCracken, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DRAMATIC SCHOOL: Luise Rainer, Paulette Goddard, Alan Marshal, Ann Rutherford, Lana Turner—I saw this picture screened and checked it out as not suitable for small town patronage. The women might like it, and it is well done, but the rehearsal of scenes from Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" will put the men and children to sleep.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

FLIRTING WITH FATE: Joe E. Brown, Leo Carrillo—Not well made, disconnected, poor story. Why not give Joe Brown a chance.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GIRL DOWNSTAIRS, THE: Franchot Tone, Franciska Gaal—Slow moving romantic comedy. Will please ladies only.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

GREAT WALTZ, THE: Milizia Korjus, Luise Rainer, Fernand Gravet—Bringing to the screen what I consider and the audience, too, the finest voice that we have ever run, Miss Korjus'. Great, fine range, power and purity of tone in all registers. But the picture did not do business. All that I can lay it to is too much class for the average small town audience. Why they passed it up I don't know, for I think that it is one of the finest pictures that we have run. On the concert swing they would pay two bucks a throw to hear a voice of the quality that Miss Korjus possesses and we could not sell it to them at two bits. Gravet did all right but I am just wondering if there had been leads that were better known if the picture would have had more chance.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LISTEN DARLING: Freddie Bartholomew, Judy Garland, Walter Pidgeon, Mary Astor—Good picture to good business. Will please old and young. Nothing big but what the customer likes to buy. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 29-30.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

LISTEN, DARLING: Freddie Bartholomew, Judy Garland—Fairly good program feature that did surprisingly well at the box office. Played January 1.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LISTEN, DARLING: Freddie Bartholomew, Judy Garland, Mary Astor, Walter Pidgeon—An excellent Bank Night picture.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LOVE FINDS ANDY HARDY: Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Judy Garland, Cecilia Parker, Fay Holden, Lana Turner, Ann Rutherford—Very good and pleased 100 per cent. The Judge Hardy series just can't be beat. Running time, 91 minutes. Played December 30-January 1.—O. W. Chapek, Annex Theatre, Anamosa, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

OUT WEST WITH THE HARDYS: Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Cicilia Parker, Fay Holden, Virginia Weidler—This series is the best ever. They are just like money in the bank. Good, clean, humorous entertainment. This one did good business considering the date it played. You can step on this one. Played December 21-23.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

PORT OF SEVEN SEAS: Wallace Beery, Frank Morgan, Maureen O'Sullivan, John Beal—This picture was advertised as more exciting than "Bad Man of Brimstone." But this picture can't compare with "Bad Man." The Beery fans were disappointed in this one. Morgan seemed to be the main actor. The picture was good but not a Beery show. A few more like this starring Beery and my patrons will forget him. Running time, 81 minutes. Played January 7-8. —O. W. Chapek, Annex Theatre, Anamosa, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

SPRING MADNESS: Lew Ayres, Maureen O'Sullivan, Burgess Meredith—Why call it "Spring Madness?" It is year 'round madness, not omitting Sundays and bank holidays. A better than ordinary cast wasted on the silliest show ever filmed. It's the worst since the flood and I don't mean the recent eastern floods, either. Running time, 67 minutes. Played December 9-11.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SPRING MADNESS: Lew Ayres, Maureen O'Sullivan, Burgess Meredith—No dice. Metro slipped somewhere on this one and my bet is that it was a weak story. On second thought, that was it. I supposed they are entitled to one or two. But it certainly does not measure up to "Young Dr. Kildare."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SPRING MADNESS: Lew Ayres, Maureen O'Sullivan, Burgess Meredith—Did not draw but pleased those that came.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TEST PILOT: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy, Lionel Barrymore—"Swell" became the word of the week here whenever mention of this excellent picture was made. And why not. With such fine stars as Gable, Loy, Tracy and Barrymore, what could one expect? It was regarded here as being one of the best aviation pictures ever screened, having a plausible story and containing much in the way of humor, action and pathos. We will be very happy to show another picture equal to this any time. It is high class entertainment and will be a satisfying dish for any theatre owner's patronage. Give it your best playing time; you cannot lose. It is one picture that is self-advertising. Running time, 120 minutes. Played December 31.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education & Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

TOO HOT TO HANDLE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Walter Pidgeon, Leo Carrillo, Walter Connolly—Now, here is what I would call a very good picture. Good acting, splendid cast, and a nice, swift moving plot. It's box office, so what more could any exhibitor ask for? It's got "it." So go to it and see what it can do for you. Our audience enjoyed this one, and if all pictures meet up to the standard of this one we wouldn't wonder where our next dollar is coming from. Running time, 106 minutes. Played January 3-4.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND (reissue): Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—In a crack for a booking and picked this up rather than a cheap program picture. It did fair business on the repeat. The notable thing is the advance that has come on recording since this one was made. You don't realize how much it has been improved until you run a picture released a couple of years back.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

VACATION FROM LOVE: Dennis O'Keefe, Florence Rice—I didn't think this picture was so awfully poor. I've played them a lot worse. But after reading the exhibitor's report on these pages saying he paid for it and then did not play it, I hesitated somewhat at first. However, I feel that I can honestly say that it will get by fairly well as the second feature on a double feature bill. Running time, 66 minutes. Played January 5-6.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

YELLOW JACK: Robert Montgomery, Virginia Bruce—A real show. Based on yellow fever epidemic during Spanish-American war. This one will do business.—J. K. Burgess, Iris Theatre, Velva, N. D. General patronage.

FOUR CONTRIBUTORS FROM FOUR STATES

From states from Maine to Texas come four new reporters to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department. They are:

Bob Cox, Park Theatre, Dexter, Maine.

C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Mississippi.

Jack Farr, Strand Theatre, Yorktown, Texas.

Gerhard J. Abeln, State Theatre, Sauk Rapids, Minesota.

Exhibitors Collier and Farr are not unknown to readers of the columns, but Mr. Farr's latest report appeared a year and a half ago, and Mr. Collier's more than three years ago.

YOUNG DR. KILDARE: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Lynne Carver, Jo Ann Sayers, Nat Pendleton—A swell picture. Lionel Barrymore gives his usual brilliant performance and Lew Ayres really goes to town. Excellent supporting cast, good story packed with human interest and Nat Pendleton furnishing the comedy. Patrons are asking when I will have another of this series. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 2-4.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

YOUNG DR. KILDARE: Lew Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Lynne Carver, Jo Ann Sayers—Again MGM gives us a pleasing picture that drew nicely the first day. What it will do from now on is a question. Ayres is rightfully coming into his own as a star. We trust the balance of the series will be as enjoyable as this one. Excellent for audience appreciation. Just a good picture. Running time, 81 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

Monogram

PAINTED TRAIL, THE: Tom Keene—Good western, but Tom Keene is not liked so much here and our business isn't average when we play him.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

PHANTOM RANGER, THE: Tim McCoy—Played as a co-feature with "Let's Make a Night Of It" and did a sweet little business. This picture, too, was a first-run in Torrington. This picture gets away from the usual run of cowboy pictures and it wasn't bad at all. Yes, I think we might even throw one orchid Monogram's way. Running time, 53 minutes. Played midnight December 31-January 1.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

Paramount

ARTISTS AND MODELS ABROAD: Jack Benny, Joan Bennett, Mary Boland, Yacht Club Boys—Another disappointment from Paramount. Played this two days and din't get film rental. Many complaints. Played January 4-5.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

IF I WERE KING: Ronald Colman, Frances Dee, Ellen Drew, Basil Rathbone—In the silent days this was made and it was at that time one of the best. Remade, it has all the elements for entertainment enhanced by sound. Colman, the finished actor, right on top of his role and ably abetted by Frances Dee. This girl, Ellen Drew; where has she been all this time? I am here to tell you that in her small bit she was great. In every part but one she was dirty and disheveled, yet she stood out. Certainly they have something when they do that. In character, of course, a Paris gamin.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Annie Gillis, Robert Kent, June Travis—We double featured it and did well with it. Running time, 60 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa. General patronage.

PRIDE OF THE WEST: William Boyd, Charlotte Field, George Hayes, Russell Hayden—OK for the houses that play these on Fridays and Saturdays. Running time, 56 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

SPAWN OF THE NORTH: George Raft, Henry Fonda, Dorothy Lamour, Akim Tamiroff, John Barrymore, Lynne Overman, Louise Platt—A swell picture that should please everyone but the weak-hearted. It had some of the bloodiest scenes I ever saw. Had many compliments on the picture. Running time, 111 minutes. Played December 18-20.—M. D. Buxton, Garden Theatre, McCracken, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TEXANS, THE: Joan Bennett, Randolph Scott, May Robson, Walter Brennan—A very fine show, especially for a Kansas town. It makes the people feel good to see something about their own state. Crowd was above average on Sunday night. Running time, 90 minutes. Played January 1-3.—M. D. Buxton, Garden Theatre, McCracken, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TOM SAWYER, DETECTIVE: Donald O'Connor, June Travis, Robert Kent—Nice little picture for Friday-Saturday, which pleased all. Swell entertainment for the children. Played January 6-7.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

TOUCHDOWN ARMY: Mary Carlisle, John Howard—A passable picture to no business. Customers probably stayed at home and played with Junior's train or "sump'n." Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 25.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

TOUCHDOWN ARMY: John Howard, Mary Carlisle—A very good picture which drew a number of the high school kids in. We played it on a Sunday as the main feature and did a fairly nice little business on it. A West Point picture centering around the Army football team. Fast moving and enjoyable to most all. This picture deserves top mention on your program. It has even greater possibilities if you have a college in your town. Nuff said. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 7.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

Republic

ARSON RACKETS SQUAD: Robert Livingston, Rosalind Keith—This was a fine little picture and good for any spot Friday and Saturday. Running time, 67 minutes. Played December 16-17.—Gerhard J. Abeln, Sauk Rapids, Minn. General patronage.

BOOTS AND SADDLES: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Judith Allen—Another great western from Autry. Played this on Christmas day and was not a least bit worried or disappointed. Thanks, Gene. Played December 26-27.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Sydney, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

LARCENY ON THE AIR: Bob Livingston—Livingston is well liked here and this pleased on a double. Not strong enough for a single. Played December 9-10.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

MAN FROM MUSIC MOUNTAIN: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Carol Hughes—A good drawing picture that has nothing to recommend it but the pulling power of Autry. Running time, 60 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

OLD BARN DANCE, THE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Helen Valkis—Another wow from Gene and the boy deserves credit. Easily the best draw in western stars. Playing Autrys in place of specials. Played December 14-15.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Sydney, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

YODELIN' KID FROM PINE RIDGE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Betty Bronson—Good Autry picture to below average business. Smiley Burnette is still the big show. Running time, 56 minutes. Played December 31.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

RKO Radio

CAREFREE: Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers—Not so good. Will not do business and shouldn't. No story. Not much production. I was disappointed in this one, as critics had led me to believe it was good. —J. K. Burgess, Iris Theatre, Velva, N. D. General patronage.

MOTHER CAREY'S CHICKENS: Anne Shirley, Ruby Keeler, Fay Bainter—Very good. Down-to-earth story. Play it. Well liked and produced.—J. K. Burgess, Iris Theatre, Velva, N. D. General patronage.

PAINTED DESERT: George O'Brien—Fair western.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY AT THE CIRCUS: Tommy Kelly, Ann Gillis, Edgar Kennedy, Spanky McFarland —This probably will not make the ten best of the year class but it is an excellent small town picture. The circus acts are the highlight. Plenty of action and comedy keep them laughing from start to finish. Running time, 68 minutes. Played December 16-18.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY AT THE CIRCUS: Tommy Kelly, Ann Gillis, Edgar Kennedy, Spanky McFarland —A surprise Friday-Saturday good grosser. Everybody seemed to have a good time. Running time, 67 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa. General patronage.

ROOM SERVICE: Marx Brothers, Lucille Ball, Ann Miller, Frank Albertson—Played this Christmas day. Either put the spirit in the audience or added to their "spirits," I don't know which. It's a good show if it has been panned. Play it, Mr. Parkhurst. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 25.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

ROOM SERVICE: Marx Brothers—Pass this by all means. Nothing to it. A complete washout. Why RKO went "nuts" over this is a mystery to me.—J. K. Burgess, Iris Theatre, Velva, N. D. General patronage.

ROOM SERVICE: Marx Brothers, Lucille Ball, Ann Miller, Frank Albertson—Personally, I would have been gad to say "Hail and Farewell" in the first reel but it sure clicked with the cash customers. Some came every night and a number told me it was the best show they had seen for months, so I will be glad to say "Hail" to the Marx Brothers again soon. People want to laugh when they go to a show. Running time, 78 minutes. Played December 30-January 1.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TARNISHED ANGEL: Sally Eilers, Ann Miller, Lee Bowman—RKO has some excellent programmers; if they would only make an "A" once a year. Running time, 65 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa. General patronage.

TARNISHED ANGEL: Sally Eilers, Ann Miller, Lee Bowman—It's different and this fact alone should make it pay off in real dividends. Sally Eilers does some splendid acting and I think that bouquets should be thrown in the direction of both Miss Eilers and RKO. A fast moving and actually different plot. We could have easily played this one as the feature if we had only known. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 3-4.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

ALEXANDER'S RAGTIME BAND: Alice Faye, Tyrone Power, Don Ameche—Some very catchy music here, but outside of that I don't see what all the shouting's about. Hardly made film rental on this due mostly to the bad weather. Played December 29.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ALWAYS IN TROUBLE: Jane Withers, Robert Kellard, Jean Rogers—Good Jane Withers picture. Pleased average business. Played January 1-3.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE (RE-ISSUE): Will Rogers—Another fine picture with the greatest of all actors.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

DOWN ON THE FARM: Jed Prouty, Spring Byington—Good fun for the family. Well acted.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

I have been in the picture business for twenty-three years in a small way and have read the HERALD several years, but have never been moved to report a picture because I have always been forced to run them too late for my report to be of any advantage to my fellow exhibitors.

I have been reading with much interest the reports on RKO's new product. They panned "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs", which picture I played hot and did twice as much as any other picture I have ever run. True, it cost me 50% but 50% on, for example, $200 is better for me than 65% of $100. I offer the following reports; you may use them if you see fit. — LESLIE F. SMITH, Mayer Theatre, Westmoreland, Kansas. Rural patronage.

FIVE OF A KIND: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt, Claire Trevor, Joan Davis, Slim Summerville—We found this to be entirely satisfactory in spite of all the unfavorable criticism we had read. It pleased everyone here and drew better than most pictures we have had lately. Brought out people who do not ordinarily attend shows. We wonder if some of those who called the Quints stupid could do any better teaching five four-year-olds to be movie actresses. They should try it some time. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 15-17.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

HOLD THAT CO-ED: John Barrymore, Marjorie Weaver, George Murphy, Joan Davis, Jack Haley—Very clever comedy that should please any type of audience. Did not draw as it should have. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 29-31.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

KEEP SMILING: Jane Withers—This star will be going places if she gets the right type of pictures suited for her. This is a dandy little picture and surpasses many of her former ones. Pick this one up, it will bring you extra business. Running time, 77 minutes. Played December 31.—Mrs. Ann Stone, Star Theatre, Unity, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural and small town patronage.

KEEP SMILING: Jane Withers, Gloria Stuart, Henry Wilcoxon, Helen Westley—We considered this the best Withers picture to date. It had all the usual elements to please the youngsters and yet was satisfactory adult entertainment. She was at her best and supported by a very capable cast. Running time, 77 minutes. Played December 7-8.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

KENTUCKY: Loretta Young, Richard Greene, Walter Brennan—Best color we have had. A fine picture that pleased. Horse lovers rave about it. Above average business. Walter Brennan steals the show. Played January 4-6.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

MY LUCKY STAR: Sonja Henie, Richard Greene, Joan Davis, Buddy Ebsen, Cesar Romero—Good Henie picture but Christmas must have had the crowds. Joan Davis as detracting as ever. Some of the gags made the old folks blush terribly. Running time, 84 minutes. Played December 26-27.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

ONE IN A MILLION: Sonja Henie, Don Ameche, Adolphe Menjou—Paid too much for this type of picture and was no drawing card in our town. Not for general patronage. Running time, 82 minutes. Played November 20-21.—Gerhard J. Abeln, State Theatre, Sauk Rapids, Minn. General patronage.

PANAMINT'S BAD MAN: Smith Ballew, Evelyn Daw—Very fine western. Smith Ballew really was beginning to become popular. Let's have more with him and his good voice. I see he was in the ten most popular for the year (Motion Picture Herald). I would like to see Smith Ballew make westerns for Warner Bros. That would make a real combination. What about it, Warner Bros.? Don't let a western star that was in the best ten stay idle. We want more with him.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

REUNION: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt, Slim Summerville, Rochelle Hudson—I think the draw is past on the Quints. Was very much disappointed in the box office. Don't run this unless you can get it at program prices. Running time, 87 minutes. Played December 11-12.—Gerhard J. Abeln, State Theatre, Sauk Rapids, Minn. General patronage.

SAFETY IN NUMBERS: Jed Prouty, Spring Byington, Shirley Deane—Just the average Jones Family picture. I played it in the middle of the week to a fair crowd. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 21-22.—M. D. Buxton, Garden Theatre, McCracken, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SHINING HOUR, THE: Joan Crawford, Margaret Sullavan, Melvyn Douglas—Fine romantic melodrama, suitable for adult fare.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

SUBMARINE PATROL: Richard Greene, Nancy Kelly—A war picture showing what part the "splinter fleet" took in the world war. Very well produced and a very entertaining movie.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

SUBMARINE PATROL: Richard Greene, Nancy Kelly, Preston Foster, George Bancroft—This picture was not as good as I expected. Did only average business. Played January 1.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

UP THE RIVER: Preston Foster, Phyllis Brooks—Quite a few laughs in this comedy.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

UP THE RIVER: Preston Foster, Arthur Treacher, Tony Martin, Phyllis Brooks—A dandy prison picture, different from any you have ever played. This is entertainment plus. Will stand alone in any spot and please 100%. McPhee knows and he plays them hot.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

WEE WILLIE WINKIE: Shirley Temple, Victor McLaglen—Thought this would bring the Christmas trade but was badly disappointed as I had the poorest Sunday business in 11 years. A lot of wasted film, and why put her in that kind of picture and kill off her popularity. It's a picture of India and people just walk away from that kind of show. A lot of people stopped to see what was on and drove away faster than they came. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 25-26.—Gerhard J. Abeln, State Theatre, Sauk Rapids, Minn. General patronage.

United Artists

ALGIERS: Charles Boyer, Hedy Lamarr, Sigrid Gurie—Some liked it and some didn't. Did just average business. Played January 3.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

YOUNG IN HEART, THE: Janet Gaynor, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Paulette Goddard, Billie Burke, Roland Young—A very fine picture. Out of ordinary story. Excellent cast and direction.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

"CRIME" OF DR. HALLET, THE: Ralph Bellamy, Josephine Hutchinson, John King—Used this as a single, and with plenty of good shorts it passed. The title helps. Played December 20-21.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

FRESHMAN YEAR: Dixie Dunbar, Ernest Truex, William Lundigan, Constance Moore—One of the best pictures of this type we have played. A college picture with all the pep and atmosphere without the usual football plot. Thoroughly refreshing and entertaining. No big names in the cast but all splendid performers. Satisfactory midweek business. Beautifully recorded. Some might well take a tip from Universal in the matter of recording. Running time, 68 minutes. Played November 8-9.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

HIS EXCITING NIGHT: Charles Ruggles, Ona Munson—We doubled this with "Swing, Sister, Swing" and made a satisfactory program.—E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa. General patronage.

HIS EXCITING NIGHT: Charles Ruggles, Ona Munson, Stepin Fetchit—Swell little picture for dual bill or one day. Plenty of comedy. Stepin Fetchit helps a lot. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 31.—C. H. Collier, Globe Theatre, Drew, Miss. Rural and small town patronage.

LADY FIGHTS BACK, THE: Kent Taylor, Irene Hervey—Might pass on a double but will not get by on a single by any means, although a nice little picture. Played December 26-27.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

LET'S MAKE A NIGHT OF IT: Charles "Buddy" Rogers, June Clyde, Claire Luce—While the picture itself was nothing to brag about we ran it first-run here in Torrington, which is a miracle for this theatre as we play everything third-run. Naturally, we did terrific on the midnight show and Sunday we did very good, too, due to the fact that it was a first-run picture and not because the picture itself was so wonderful. The picture was a fair "B" picture and that is just about all. Running time, 67 minutes. Played midnight December 31-January 1.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

LETTER OF INTRODUCTION: Andrea Leeds, Edgar Bergen, "Charlie McCarthy," Adolphe Menjou, George Murphy—Good program picture that did only fair at the box office. Too much Adolphe Menjou. If it hadn't been for "Charlie McCarthy" and "Mortimer," this would have been a flop. Running time, 103 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LETTER OF INTRODUCTION: Adolphe Menjou, Andrea Leeds, Edgar Bergen, "Charlie McCarthy," George Murphy—Splendid entertainment. An interesting story with a good plot. "McCarthy" at his best and beautifully directed by John M. Stahl. The entire cast is superb. Did not draw as well as it should have. A nice production well recorded. Running time, 103 minutes. Played December 25-27.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLE TOUGH GUY: "Dead End" Kids, Robert Wilcox, Helen Parrish—This picture is OK. The "Dead End" kids are more or less box office now and they appear to be doing a nice little business all over. Give it a try and see for yourself. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 2.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

LITTLE TOUGH GUY: "Dead End" Kids, Robert Wilcox, Helen Parrish—Right up our alley and can say this picture will make money in any spot. Play it and watch your cash pile up. Running time, 83 minutes. Played December 5-6.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

MAD ABOUT MUSIC: Deanna Durbin, Herbert Marshall, Gail Patrick, William Frawley—An outstanding picture for the masses. Play it. Played December 22-23.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT INTRUDER: Louis Hayward, Barbara Reed—Used this on a double and pleased. Not good enough for a single. No stars to draw from.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

OUTLAW EXPRESS: Bob Baker, Cecilia Callejo—Another from Baker that pleased. Bob is well liked by our fans. Give us more of his pictures. Played January 2-3.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

SOME BLONDES ARE DANGEROUS: Dorothea Kent, Noah Berry, Jr.—A nice picture. Played on a double and passed. No known stars to draw from. Therefore, not good at the box office. Played December 30-31.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

SPY RING: William Hall, Jane Wyman—Another feature from Universal we had to play on a double and only as such. Stars not known here. Therefore, no draw. Ten more of these to play. My, oh, my. Played December 30-31.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

STATE POLICE: John King, Constance Moore—A great picture with action. Played this as feature No. 1 on a double and pleased 100%. John King is wonderful. Played December 28-29.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Sydney, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

SWING, SISTER, SWING: Ken Murray, Johnny Downs, Ernest Truex, Kathryn Kane—Neat little Jitterbug picture. The younger bunch thought it was OK. We doubled with Universal's "His Exciting Night" and made a satisfactory program. Running time, 67 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Strand Theatre, Milford, Iowa. General patronage.

THAT CERTAIN AGE: Deanna Durbin, Melvyn Douglas, Jackie Cooper, Irene Rich, John Halliday, Nancy Carroll—One of the nicest and most enjoyable pictures we have ever shown. The producers of Durbin pictures certainly deserve more than an orchid for their intelligence in the handling of this adorable young lady. Deanna is perfect in voice, looks and acting ability. We haven't had so many raves about a picture for a long time. It drew well and everyone loved it. Beautifully produced and recorded. We can't say more. Running time, 103 minutes. Played January 1-3.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

YOU'RE A SWEETHEART: Alice Faye, George Murphy—If you haven't played this one yet, get it. If old, one of the very best musicals ever made. It's "tops." Wili please all. Full of original and fine entertainment.—J. K. Burgess, Iris Theatre, Velva, N. D. General patronage.

YOUTH TAKES A FLING: Joel McCrea, Andrea Leeds, Dorothea Kent, Frank Jenks—Good picture but it seems as if Joel McCrea is not so good when it comes to drawing 'em in. We played this Christmas night to fair business. Running time, 79 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner Brothers

CASE OF THE BLACK CAT, THE: Ricardo Cortez, June Travis, Jane Bryan—Used this on a double and pleased. Warners have some mighty good features that can be used to good advantage on double bills. Have booked "The Case of the Stuttering Bishop," "Missing Witnesses" and "Daredevil Drivers" to follow this. Played December 23-24.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

DAWN PATROL: Errol Flynn, Basil Rathbone—Although a war picture this is very, very well done and all the cast play their roles to perfection. The absence of ladies does not hurt the entertainment of this fine picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

HEART OF THE NORTH: Dick Foran, Gale Page—Very good action story. Color beautiful. Pleased all.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND BEHAVE: Wayne Morris, Priscilla Lane, John Litel, Dick Foran—Nice program picture that pleased and drew good. Good names in this and it can't help but draw. This and "Men Are Such Fools" kept us out of the red. Played December 7-8.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

RACKET BUSTERS: George Brent, Gloria Dickson, Humphrey Bogart, Walter Abel—Another box office smash from Warner and a pleasure to do business with them. Out of 52 features from this company only three could be classed below average. Played January 2-3.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

RACKET BUSTERS: Humphrey Bogart, George Brent, Gloria Dickson, Walter Abel—Very good picture full of action. A little rough for the ladies. It seemed as if all the men and kids liked it. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

VALLEY OF THE GIANTS: Wayne Morris, Claire Trevor, John Litel, Charles Bickford, Alan Hale—Here's a humdinger. Action, color, story, wonderful cast. In other words, the works. Extended runs and Warners is coming back strong after the nose-dive they took last year.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

WHITE BANNERS: Claude Rains, Fay Bainter, Jackie Cooper, Bonita Granville—Really and truly a wonderful picture. Any theatre will be proud after showing this. Give it your best playing days and you won't be sorry. Played December 12-13.—George Khattar, Casino Theatre, Whitney Pier, Nova Scotia, Canada. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BERMUDA—ISLE OF PARADISE: Columbia Tours—If the balance of these travels are as good as this we will be pleased. A good reel but do not compare it with FitzPatrick's or you will be disappointed. Running time, seven minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

COMMUNITY SING, NO. 1: College Songs—Very good, indeed. In fact, excellent, especially for our New Year's Eve Midnight show. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

MANY SNAPPY RETURNS: Charley Chase—A pretty good two-reel comedy that was especially enjoyed by the kiddies. Running time, 18 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

WASHINGTON PARADE: No. 1—Very good short. Interesting and educational. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

Educational

WE LIVE IN TWO WORLDS: Treasure Chest—With apologies to J. B. Priestley, who is one of my favorite authors, this is about the driest, most tiresome short of this kind I have seen. Several beautiful shots in it, but too slow. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

Grand National

CAVALCADE OF STUFF: No. 2—Something out of the ordinary and pleased very much.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

CAPTAIN KIDD'S TREASURE: Historical Mysteries—This was a good historical but my patrons do not want these kind of shorts. MGM shorts don't seem to be so good for me. Running time, 10 minutes.—O. W. Chapek, Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

CAPTAIN'S CHRISTMAS, THE: Captain and the Kids—One of the poorest cartoons we have ever played.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

CITY OF LITTLE MEN, THE: MGM Miniatures —Really a buildup for "Boys Town." Interesting if you have not yet played "Boys Town." Running time, 11 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HIDE AND SHRIEK: Our Gang—The usual hilarious short we can always depend upon from Our Gang. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PENNY'S PICNIC: Pete Smith Specialties—Another dandy colored cooking reel of interest to all.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PYGMY HUNT, THE: Captain and the Kids—Why Metro discontinued the Harman-Ising series to make this mediocre cartoon is beyond me. My patrons do not like them after running the beautiful cartoons that every company but Metro makes. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SYDNEY, PRIDE OF AUSTRALIA: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Good traveltalk in color.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

THREE ON A ROPE: Pete Smith Specialties—No good for small town. Running time, 10 minutes.—O. W. Chapek, Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Rural and small town patronage.

TUPAPAOO: MGM Miniatures—An excellent subject that is out of the ordinary. Very well received. Running time, eight minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Captain and the Kids —Pretty good cartoon.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

GRID RULES: Pete Smith Specialties—An interesting sport subject. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

MARCH OF TIME: No. 2—Excellent. The best combination news-in-the-making and history-forming series that I have ever seen. It's real box office, too. On this particular issue I invited all of the regular firemen of the local fire department to be our guests to see Franklin Wentworth's U. S. Fire Fighters. Incidentally, it's swell publicity for the theatre, too. Running time, 20 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

MICKEY'S PARROT: Walt Disney Cartoons—A fair cartoon. Disney has made better. Running time, six minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

SWEET SHOE: Nu-Atlas Productions—Splendid reel with song and dance numbers. Pleased. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SWINGING MALLETS: RKO Pathe Sportscope—This company makes the mistake of not splitting their sports reels into diversified subjects. An entire reel on polo is too long for a small town audience. Running time, seven minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

ATHLETIC ODDITIES: Adventure of the Newsreel Cameraman—Very interesting. Would be a nice addition to any type of program. Enjoyed by everyone. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

ISLE OF PLEASURE: Magic Carpet Series—One of the best traveltalks we have shown. Beautiful and interesting and not boring as some of them are. We like sepia as well as color, if not better. Our patrons seem to enjoy Magic Carpets more than any other shorts of this type. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

ISLE OF PLEASURE: Magic Carpet Series—A very good black and white travel.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

VILLAGE BLACKSMITH: Terry-Toons—Just an average black and white cartoon. Running time, 8 minutes.—Mrs. Ann Stone, Star Theatre, Unity, Saskatchewan, Canada. Rural and small town patronage.

WHAT EVERY BOY SHOULD KNOW: Lew Lehr —We think these shorts are fairly good, at least different, and quite amusing, but I have never heard such wretched recording. I am sure I don't know how they ever got anything to sound as bad as these do. Running time, 10 minutes.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

LITTLE HIAWATHA: Silly Symphonies—A good short. Walt Disney never fails. Running time, nine minutes.—M. D. Buxton, Garden Theatre, McCracken, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Universal

PATIO SERENADE: Mentone Musical Comedies—Too much of the sameness. Cannot recommend it. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

RHYTHM CAFE: Mentone Musical Comedies—One of the best two-reel subjects we have had for some time. Some excellent talent, amusingly done, and very beautifully recorded. We played this with Universal's "Freshman Year" and it was a pleasure to listen to them both. Running time, 20 minutes.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

DON BESTOR AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—A very good orchestral short. Good music by an able maestro and his band. Variety too. Mildred Law's splendid tap-dancing, however, lost some of its effect due to her "sack-cloth" attire. That "Jimmie Had a Nickel" specialty sure brought forth peals of laughter. Play it, they'll like it. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

LAD-IN BAGDAD, A: Merrie Melodies—A swell little cartoon in color. Running time, seven minutes. —Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

Serial

SPIDER'S WEB, THE: Warren Hull, Iris Meredith—Played chapter 10. A good serial. Running time, 18 minutes.—Pearce Parkhurst, State Theatre, Torrington, Conn. General patronage.

ACADEMY'S '39 AWARDS MACHINERY GETS GOING

Members of Committees Named; First Ballots Go Out This Month; Few Changes

Preparations for the eleventh annual "Awards of Merit" of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, made for Hollywood's best talent accomplishments of the year, were started Wednesday with announcement of the names of awards committee members. The general committee held its first meeting on the following evening.

This year's Academy Awards banquet, at which the "little Oscar" statues will be presented to those selected from the various production crafts, will be held on March 9th, at a place still to be determined, in Hollywood.

The awards are made on the basis of professional or technical perfection or accomplishment, not necessarily on box office performance.

No change from the basic awards procedure of last year apparently is contemplated, with the Screen Actors Guild, the Screen Directors Guild and Screen Writers Guild again making nominations in their respective crafts.

Thalberg Award Procedure

However, there will be a change in the procedure for nominating and selecting the winner of the Irving G. Thalberg Memorial Award for "outstanding procedure," according to a resolution of the general awards committee. This year a committee of 12 producers will nominate five producer candidates for the honor, and the final voting will be done by members of the Academy and of the Screen Directors, Writers and Actors guilds. Only senior members of the Actors Guild will be permitted to vote.

Last year, the first for the Thalberg Award, a committee of 12, representing actors, writers and directors, but no producers, selected the winner, Darryl F. Zanuck, without a general vote.

There will be an additional award in the music division, making three awards, one each for the best song written originally for motion pictures, one for the best original scoring, and one for the best scoring without taking into consideration the origin of the music.

All pictures whose national release dates were from January 1 to December 31, 1938, are eligible for the year's awards, whether or not they have been shown in or around Los Angeles.

Ballots Out This Month

Donald Gledhill, executive of the Academy, will send out the first nomination ballots by January 31st, and all ballots will be mailed by February 28th.

The general nominating committee appointed to select nominees for the best performance, best writing, best directing and outstanding producer of the year follows:

Representing the Screen Actors Guild: Gene Lockhart, Charles Trowbridge, Reginald Denny; representing the Screen Directors Guild: John Cromwell, Clarence Brown, George Marshall; representing the Screen Writers Guild: Frances Goodrich, Albert Hackett and Sheridan Gibney. Nominating for the producers' branch of the Academy will be Darryl F. Zanuck, Jack L. Warner and Louis B. Mayer, and for the technicians' branch: Nathan Levinson and Joseph Valentine.

Alternates are: Walter Kingsford, Anatole Litvak, Henry Hathaway, George Oppenheimer, Gilbert Gabriel, Melville Baker, Pandro Berman, William LeBaron, Hunt Stromberg, Hans Dreier and Vernon Walker.

The executive committee of awards is composed of Frank Capra, president of the Academy; W. S. Van Dyke, president of the Screen Directors Guild, and Howard Estabrook.

Both senior and junior members of the Actors Guild, together with all Academy members and members of the Directors and Writers Guilds will ballot in the finals for the year's best performances, as nominated by the Actors Guild. The Writers Guild will nominate for the writing awards and all the aforementioned groups, with the exception of juniors (extras) of the Actors Guild will make the final writer selection. The Directors Guild will nominate for the direction award and, again, all except the extras will have a voice in those finals.

The studio technical and scientific awards will be selected in final voting by the technical members of the Academy from nominations made by Academy committees of each technical group.

Committees on Rules

This week, Nathan Levinson, chairman of the Technicians Branch of the Academy, announced the appointment of a number of committees to consider the rules used to govern the various technical awards, for the purpose of determining whether or not changes should be made.

Membership of these various committees consists of the following:

FILM EDITING AWARD: Harold J. McCord, chairman, Anne Bauchens, Martin Cohn, William Holmes, Eugene Milford, Maurice Pivar and Murray Seldeen.

SOUND RECORDING AWARD: John Aalberg, Bernard Brown, E. H. Hansen, Nathan Levinson, John Livadary, C. L. Lootens, Thomas Moulton, Elmer Raguse, Loren Ryder and Douglas Shearer.

Rules for the Scientific or Technical Award are being referred to the executive committee of the Academy Technicians Branch, the membership of which consists of Nathan Levinson, chairman, John Arnold, Farciot Edouart, Fred Gage, Wesley C. Miller, Van Nest Polglase, Ray Wilkinson and Bernard Herzbrun; and, chairman of the Art Directors Section, Peter Mole; chairman of the Equipment Section, Harold J. Johnston Observes 25th Anniversary

To observe the 25th anniversary of W. Ray Johnston's entrance into motion pictures, independent franchise holders of Monogram Pictures, of which Mr. Johnston is president, will hold a sales "jubilee" during February.

Although Mr. Johnston's "New Monogram" is only two years old, already the company has sold its product to 6,000 accounts, and the company says that in 1939 it expects to reach a sales quota of over six million dollars. The company has set its 1939-40 convention for May 1st at New Orleans.

Included in the new year's program are "Navy Secrets," "Star Reporter," "Sky Pirate," a series of detective stories starring Boris Karloff, a series of action dramas starring Frankie Darro, "The Murphy Family," "Wanted by the Police" and "Tough Kid."

Now only 47, W. Ray Johnston entered the film industry in 1914 with the Thanhauser Company, at New Rochelle, N. Y. At 21 he became secretary to Charles J. Hite, president of Thanhauser, where he learned both studio and distributing operations. One year later he became a Thanhauser "extra," working up to leads. While a player, he was instrumental in effecting a working agreement between actors and employers.

In 1916 he became treasurer of Syndicate Film Company, organized to distribute "The Million Dollar Mystery," one of the first motion picture serials. Produced at a cost of $80,000, the film grossed $1,600,000. James Cruze starred.

Following syndicate and Thanhauser, Mr. Johnston became president of Big Productions Film Corporation. Shortly after, he went to Arrow Films as vice-president and general sales manager.

In 1924 he organized Rayart Pictures, turning a $10,000 stock investment into a business gross of $1,250,000.

The year 1931 found him heading a producing and distributing company, Monogram Pictures, which in four years, he geared to 36 pictures a year.

In the latter part of 1935 Republic Pictures was formed with H. J. Yates, Mr. Johnston serving as its president. However, a year later Mr. Johnston withdrew to reorganize the original Monogram.

Born in Bristow, Iowa, on January 2, 1892, Ray Johnston was graduated from the Waterloo College of Commerce in Iowa, and started in business with the Waterloo Daily Reporter. In succession he became associated with the Citizens' Gas and Electric Company, Vaughan Land Company, Western Realty and Investment Company, Iowa Mausoleum Company.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

1939—JUST SHOWMANSHIP

The 1939 Quigley Awards represent the purest expression of competitive showmanship. Details are set down on following pages. Everyone everywhere starts from scratch. There are no classifications. Complete campaigns are no longer necessary. Deadlines are out. The best single ideas win the jackpot.

For instance: The theatreman plants a story . . . Lands a window . . . Promotes a contest . . . Creates setpiece or front . . . Works out a lobby or street stunt . . . Constructs a float . . . Puts together an ad . . . Stages a presentation.

He sends in the photo, the tear-sheets, or whatever the "evidence". The preliminary selections are made—every two weeks. Not next month. Preliminary winners are appointed Fortnighters, and listed as such in the Round Table. It's that simple.

From among the Fortnighters are chosen the Quarterly Plaque winners. These are appointed Quartermasters and in turn listed in the honor rolls to be seen by all. Including the boss.

Of course, it isn't so that an able theatreman won't be recognized as one until he becomes a Fortnighter, a Quartermaster. But it's a cinch that a Fortnighter, a Quartermaster will be known as a top showman.

The head men of the industry say so. They're the Judges who pick 'em. Turn a few pages and read what they say.

The man in the field likes the change, in general. Bill Johnson says the new plan is faster, more flexible, more interesting. Providence McBride opines the setup will cause the Awards to become even more valuable. Bert Leighton finds the new method the fairest one yet. Sid Holland calls it a great step forward. Bill Exton labels it streamlined exploitation at its best. A step in the right direction is how Gus Carlson looks at it. The new setup will give everybody a better chance, votes Charley Taylor. Thor Hauschild writes he is happy about the change. And so it goes.

Of course, every expression from the field is not as favorable. That is not expected. But, in the main, these few objections will be overcome as critics realize the overwhelming advantages of the new procedure.

Since the beginning, this is the spot we've been reaching for. The time is ripe. It's man-to-man. No hurdles, no restrictions. Just showmanship.

MR. McCOY IS HONORED

The way those University of Georgia students join up for stunts put on by the Lucas & Jenkins theatremen in Athens, you'd think that exploitation was a part of the school's curriculum. The answer is, of course, that the collegiates like the showmen well enough to go along and manage to have a lot of fun while so doing. All of which bears upon the recent initiation into the university's honor society, the Gridiron Club, of Manager Pierce E. McCoy.

It isn't at all unusual for managers to hold office, to take leading parts in organizational activities. But a college honor society is something else again. In Mac's case, it's a something that might be called a Ph.D. of Goodwill.

At this writing, entries in the Last Quarter of the 1938 Quigley Awards are now in the hands of the Judging Committee. Results will be announced in the issue of February 4th.

Round Table In Pictures

Originally the reprint of Volume 1, No. 1, of the "Jesse James" dime novels was conceived for free distribution by theatremen as part of their advance on the picture. Armed with tripod and home-made camera bearing title, cast and playdates, chap waited until crowd gathered and then started "grinding", after which he distributed cards to interested onlookers.

Done in brilliant colors was the eye-arresting lobby display conceived by Manager Frank Gelber, Park Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., for "Ferdinand the Bull." Theatreman reports that practically all incomers stopped to admire the setpiece before going into the show. That's Gelber admiring the finished product.

United Artists Plans "Trade Winds" Tiein

A six-day "Write your own review" contest was recently set by United Artists with the New York Journal American for Walter Wanger's "Trade Winds" at the Music Hall, New York. Cleverly keyed to arouse the maximum of interest by riding the current tide of favoritism for winter vacations, first prize is a trip and ten-day stay in Bermuda for two persons.

Each contestant was asked to see the film and then write a 200-word review. Judges for the contest are Fredric March, star of the film, W. G. Van Schmus, managing director of the Music Hall, Harry Kosiner, eastern representative for Mr. Wanger and Lynn Farnol, advertising and publicity director for United Artists.

This in connection with his opening of "Christmas Carol."

Paper led off with a three-column cut of girl holding the pooches with caption "Who'll be the lucky boy or girl," followed by story detailing the rules of the contest in addition to cast and picture plug. Next day three-column cut of Pollock's lobby display featuring the canines was run, winding up with story and names of winners.

In Davenport, Iowa, Joe Kinsky at the Capitol Theatre took the illustrations from the "Sweetheart" snapshots contest and offered guest tickets to sweethearts whose 5th, 10th, 25th and 50th wedding anniversary fell on January 1, 1939. This press book stunt was planted in the Davenport Democrat and Leader.

William Freise, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, La Crosse, Wis., placed the press book's coloring contest with the Tribune, made music store tieups, used the electrical transcriptions and distributed sweetheart candy novelties.

Wide Campaign Marks Premiere For 'Jesse James'

Twentieth Century-Fox sent its technicolor "Jesse James" into the world premiere at the New York Roxy last Friday tied to an elaborate advance that started with a newspaper campaign prepared by Charles E. McCarthy's department of the New York office. The first ads, starting Sunday, were 200 lines and ran up to 900 lines Thursday and Friday before opening. The billboard showing consisted of 170 24-sheet panels for a period of one month and 480 one-sheets were used in New York subways.

One of the features of the campaign was the reprint of the "Jesse James" dime novel with an attractive ad for the picture on the back cover. Smith and Street, the publishers, distributed 500,000 through the United States for sale on newsstands. Demand for these was said to be so brisk that the publishers printed another half million. The Roxy theatre distributed 10,000 ahead.

Another stunt that attracted attention in New York was the cavalcade of 10 masked horsemen, dressed as Jesse James, who rode down Broadway, through the financial district and back up Fifth Avenue to 59th Street for three days.

Huge 73 by 38 banner, which covered the back of the Roxy, was displayed three weeks before the picture opening and display at the theatre included five full length masked cutouts of Jesse James spotted in the interior. A large relief map of the western country where the James boys operated was also a feature of the lobby display, created by Homer Harman, Roxy ad head.

"Gunga Din" Posters Follow New Process

Unique feature of advance campaign for RKO's "Gunga Din" is series of what are termed "Lifeographic" 24-sheets, reported something new in posters and made by a new process originated by S. Barrett McCormick, director of advertising and publicity. Posters will bring to billboards in black and white actual life-size action pictures.

Series of six different posters will be spotted in 37 United States and Canada key cities, each poster being a highlight from the picture. In addition to the black-and-whites there will also be one 24 in full color.

Oil Company To Plug Paramount Pictures

Paramount has joined forces with Pan-American Petroleum on forthcoming pictures to plug stars and directors in the oil company's advertising.

Included in the tieup are 24-sheets, monthly movie magazine distributed at the oil company stations, day and date newspaper ads, all publicising current film in which star appears. The movie news is a four-page tab featuring Paramount publicity. Campaign is to cover Louisiana, Alabama, Tennessee and Mississippi.

1939 AWARDS CHANGES WIN INDUSTRY APPROVAL

Revamping of Competitions to Stress Importance of Individual Ideas Endorsed by Executives and Theatremen; Preliminary Contests Hailed as Step Forward to Speed Exploitation Pace as Showmen Prepare Ideas for February Datings

by A-MIKE VOGEL

In the sixth year of the Quigley Awards, begining on February 1st, is inaugurated the most important change in the history of these theatre competitions. As announced in last week's issue, the Awards are now to be judged on single ideas and not on entire campaigns, as previously.. Careful analysis of Quigley Award entries discloses that in every winning campaign there has been included some outstanding single idea; that the Judges were obviously impressed with these ideas which often proved to be the keynote of the entire campaign. Thus, it was determined to give this individual idea—(the "meat" of the campaign) the importance it rates.

The "meat" may be most anything in the way of exploitation, advertising or publicity. It might be an unusual window display in a best location, a first-time contest in a tough paper, a sock page-one story or series. It can be an ad or series that sets the whole town talking, a street stunt that "kills 'em," a float that snarls traffic, a lobby setpiece or front that stops every passerby.

The 1939 Awards also considers the time element. With this in mind, two-week preliminary contests have been adopted. These preliminaries will be known as "Fortnights." At the end of each "Fortnight," the three best ideas received here during that time will be chosen and the theatremen submitting these designated as "Fortnighters." At the end of each Quarter, entries of those who have won the Fortnight title during that Quarter will be judged for the Quarterly Awards and the added title of "Quartermaster." Then, of course, the Quartermasters of each Quarter will be voted upon for the annual 1939 Grand Awards designations.

Extra Awards Given

However, theatremen who compete consistently in the two-week periods but do not win a Fortnighter designation will be given special consideration in the Quarterly Judgings. Entrants in this classification will compete for special Fortnighter Awards. First and Honorable Mention Sheepskin Certificates will again be awarded.

As announced, classifications are out. Everyone starts from scratch and everyone has an equal opportunity of winning, regardless of situation. Remember, "it's what you do, not where you are."

The field now is wide open. All theatremen are eligible for the Awards and all product eligible for entry, including shorts, serials in addition to features. Promotions on stage presentations, amateur and professional, will be considered as will ideas on goodwill and institutional drives. Further latitude is allowed with the discontinuance of deadlines.

On following pages are acceptances to the 1939 Judging Committee and comments on the Awards from executives and theatremen. Further names and endorsements will be carried next week, as will additional details of the Competitions.

HARRY F. SHAW
Division Manager
Loew's-Poli N. E. Division of Theatres

I will be only too happy to act as one of the judges in the awarding of the 1939 Quigley Awards.

In my opinion, the Quigley Awards have always been a great medium for showmen as it gives them a keen sense of competition which is always beneficial, not only to the motion picture industry but to all industries. The new set-up as outlined for the awarding of the 1939 Quigley Awards looks very promising and should lend an added impetus to the men in the field.

WILLIAM R. FERGUSON

I appreciate your appointing me to the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards. I have been a member of this Committee each year and am fully aware of the stimulant this campaign lends toward better grosses and in bringing recognition to the manager in the field.

HARRY M. KALMINE
Zone Manager
Warner Bros. Circuit
Pittsburgh, Penna.

I shall be very glad to accept your invitation to serve on the Judging Committee of the 1939 Quigley Awards.

My opinion of the value of the Quigley Competitions has not changed. They have had my endorsements in the past, and I still feel they are of prime value in stimulating managers toward smarter and more comprehensive showmanship.

IRVING LESSER
Managing Director
Roxy Theatre

I shall be happy to serve on the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards. I am indeed grateful for this opportunity because I have been on the committee all the five years since the judging was originated and I find that my wits are being continuously sharpened as regards the needs and opportunities for exploitation.

I think broadening the scope, as you are doing in 1939, will have many benefits to the managers who enter the competition as well as a tremendous help to those who profit by the pages of your publication.

Aids Managers' Earnings, Is Fitzgibbons Opinion

I am pleased to be included in the honor of being asked to be a member of the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

There is no question but that out of the interest in the Managers' Round Table comes ideas that stimulate box office grosses and the information disseminated by your Department is of great value personally to our managers as it helps them to increase their pay checks. It is also of great benefit to the circuit and to the motion picture distributors generally.

We sincerely hope this will be continued and that this year the Canadian managers will be able to turn in examples of their showmanship that will entitle them to Quigley Awards—J. J. FITZGIBBONS, Vice-President, Famous Players-Canadian Corp., Ltd.

NED E. DEPINET
Vice President
RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

I will be glad to serve on your Judging Committee for the current year.

HARRY GOLD

United Artists Corp.

Thanks for your letter. I will be very happy to act as one of the judges for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

J. J. UNGER
Eastern and Southern Division Sales Manager
Paramount Pictures, Inc.

I shall be pleased and honored to have you add my name to the Committee list.

I heartily endorse the idea that is behind the Quigley Awards, because they are one of the very constructive undertakings in our Industry. There is no question in my mind but that, in stimulating enterprise and initiative in those individuals who are entrusted with the responsibility of showmanship, they, in turn, stimulate better grosses at the box office.

I also agree with your ideas as to the manner in which you will handle the 1939 Awards.

HARRY GOLDBERG
Director of Theatre Advertising and Publicity
Warner Bros. Circuit

I am glad to see that you are changing the basis of the Quigley Awards for 1939. I believe it stimulates interest in this competition to vary the contest from year to year.

Your 1939 idea is especially important, because exploitation tends to be routine and managers largely operate from experience and do not often explore new merchandising angles.

Using the single idea of one promotion or novel merchandising angle as a basis for awarding the prizes, should stimulate showmen all over the country to pioneer in new methods of finding customers for the new crop of pictures. Such activity inevitably brings bigger grosses, and a man who gets bigger grosses out of the pictures which are hard to sell, is the man who wins recognition from his superiors.

ENDORSE NEW PROCEDURE IN 1939

Changes In Rulings Lauded by O'Donnell

Your letter again asking me to accept the appointment on the Judging Committee for the year 1939 for the Quigley Awards, received, and I am only too happy to have you include my name among the judges.

Once again it is of great satisfaction to know that your splendid publication is going to continue the Managers' Round Table in selecting Motion Picture Herald Quigley Awards for the season of 1939. I note that you have made several changes in the plan for the ensuing year, which I believe will lend it even greater value than in the past. Unquestionably our managers here in Texas have received a great many constructive ideas, and to participate in these Awards has created a fine friendly feeling, and a spirit of competitiveness that is for the good of the industry.—R. J. O'DONNELL, General Manager, Interstate Circuit, Dallas, Tex.

OSCAR A. DOOB

Director of Advertising and Publicity
Loew's Theatres

I shall be glad to serve on your 1939 Quigley Awards Committee.

I rather like the new setup of your competition. The plan to make your Awards on the best ideas or promotions instead of a series of complete campaigns should do a lot to stimulate some originality of thought. Your plan should make it easier for theatres to submit their stuff because it will do away with the temptation to spend a lot of time and money on preparing elaborate presentations of the competing campaigns.

I am sending a bulletin to Loew theatres urging them to note the new setup and make sure that Loew's earns its way into those Awards. Your competitors should help a lot to emphasize showmanship in 1939.

JULES J. RUBENS

Vice-President
Publix Great States Theatres
Chicago, Ill.

I am happy to accept the appointment to the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

Judging on a basis of single ideas or promotions, in my opinion, is a great step forward for the 1939 competitions. In other words, I am convinced there are times that a single idea may have a great deal more value than an entire campaign.

I want you to know that these competitions mean much to Great States as a whole, as they have been a fine inspiration to all our men in the field.

E. H. ROWLEY

Secretary
Robb & Rowley United, Inc.
Dallas, Texas

Have your letter asking if you may list my name as one of the judges for the Quigley Awards in 1939, sponsored by the MOTION PICTURE HERALD. It will be a pleasure to serve as one of your judges.

JACK COHN

Vice-President
Columbia Pictures Corporation

I am deeply appreciative of the fact that the MOTION PICTURE HERALD has invited me to be on the judging committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards. My appreciation, however, stems most from the fact that any stimulus toward better showmanship is bound to have a beneficial effect upon the motion picture industry as a whole.

The Quigley Awards help provide that stimulus. They have served as an incentive to showmen the world over. Theatre managers have learned that the Quigley Awards are a challenge to their ability as showmen and the fine results of previous judging prove, emphatically, that more and more showmen are taking up the challenge.

JULES LEVY

General Sales Manager
RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.

I will be pleased to serve again on the Judges Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

This is a much needed stimulant for our business. It has already brought out some fine demonstrations of showmanship in exhibition and a continuance of same, no doubt, will spur the participants to a greater and more effective result.

MONROE GREENTHAL

Director of Exploitation
United Artists Corporation

I am very happy that you have chosen me as one of the judges for your Annual Awards. Just call on me any time in connection with the Awards and I shall be at your disposal.

TED SCHLANGER

Zone Manager
Warner Bros. Circuit
Philadelphia, Pa.

Of course you can count me as one of the judges for the 1939 Quigley Awards. The managers of the Philadelphia Warner territory continually vie with each other for the honor of winning the Quigley Award. This has been a great stimulus to all and as such, has brought to the forefront many men who in a large circuit like ours, might have been submerged.

Our monthly issue of "Carry On" always features photographs and the campaigns of those in this territory who receive either an Award or honorable mention. You are doing a great piece of work, and I want to compliment you and the MOTION PICTURE HERALD for its continuance in 1939.

ROBERT M. GILLHAM

Director of Advertising & Publicity
Paramount Pictures, Inc.

I will be delighted to accept the appointment to the Judging Committee for the 1939 Awards.

GEORGE WEEKS

General Sales Manager
Monogram Pictures Corp.

Thanks for your letter asking me to accept an appointment on the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards. I appreciate this invitation and am delighted to accept.

I think your announcement for the January 14th issue hits the nail right on the head.

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1938-39 season. Asterisk (*) after title of feature denotes first appearance of picture in Release Chart.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures announced by the home offices of the distributing companies.

When a production is reviewed in Hollywood, the running time is as officially given by the West Coast studio of the company at the time of the review, and this fact is denoted by an asterisk (*) immediately preceding the number. As soon as the home office has established the running time for national release, any change from the studio figure is made and the asterisk is removed.

Running times are subject to change according to local conditions. State or city censorship deletions may cause variations from the announced and published figures; repairs to the film may be another reason.

Beachcomber Business...

From Toronto to Miami, Paramount's "The Beachcomber", the new Mayflower Picture, produced and directed by Erich Pommer, starring Charles Laughton with Elsa Lanchester, is turning in record grosses. First week at the Uptown Theatre in Toronto brought 75% above normal business, 10% above top business for the house—the picture is booked for indefinite run. In Montreal at the Princess Theatre, opening day business doubled normal week's business in three days. Fourth smash week at the New York Rivoli finds "The Beachcomber" among top four grossers in past five years. Mid-week opening at the Sheridan Theatre, Miami, topped New Year's Day high, setting mid-week record. Moving over to the Colony Theatre, Miami, opening day business was two and a half times New Year's Day top—coming within a few dollars of equalling record high of Christmas Day a year ago.

WHAT RADIO KNOWS

SIGNIFICANCE for the motion picture industry is conveyed in a statement of the policies of the National Broadcasting Company made by Mr. Lenox R. Lohr, president, to the company's advisory council, in the course of which he set down:

"During the period of elections only, the company sells time to the official representatives of the major political parties. It does not accept dramatic presentations of political issues, for it is impossible to prevent essential misrepresentation and unfairness when this technique is employed."

That is another way of saying that, in radio's wide experience, drama cannot be unbiased, that a medium for the service of the multitudes cannot venture, without prejudice, into political or social controversy in the guise of entertainment forms.

FREEDOM vs. LICENSE

BY casual minor coincidence two California newspaper clippings turn up on the editor's desk. From Fresno comes an Associated Press report on remarks by Mr. James G. Stahlman, president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, making earnest, proper, insistent defense of freedom of the press.

From Hollywood comes The Citizen-News of January 5, with a marked column entitled "NNW" esoterically titled from "Hamlet", and signed by Morton Thompson, and most peculiarly exercising what might by some be called "freedom of the press".

Mr. Thompson—"I am but mad north-northwest . . . "—engages in much involved discussion of how and why Simon & Schuster discontinued the publication of a book. He sets forth that Mr. Nate B. Spingold—only the name is miss-spelled—brought that about. So far, what of it?

However, Mr. Thompson from that point proceeded into an inexplicable, irrelevant, unprovoked and altogether amazing personal attack on Mr. Spingold. If there was a purpose, it was to have a Roman holiday.

A copy of that would have been a neat exhibit to have laid before the Fresno convention of the California publisher, with maybe the observation that freedom implies responsibility, that freedom is not license. Violent abuses invite bitter remedies.

SPEAKING of the so very free press, there's to be observed the interesting propagandistic circulation to the press of the motion picture industry of a recent issue of "The Washington Merry-Go-Round" by Mr. Drew Pearson and Mr. Robert S. Allen, who appear to be also agents of special aspects of the New Deal.

For release January 17, came, in plain envelope from United Feature Syndicate, Inc., New York, the Merry-Go-Round column headed "Worried Movie Moguls Pressure Arnold to Block Anti-Trust Suit; Have Influenced Officials for Decades; Evaded Criminal Action", etc.

The delicate nature of the presentation against the defendants in the government's suit includes "Usually a few parties in Hollywood, featuring ravishing females, are enough to persuade a Justice Department official to drop an anti-trust prosecution. So far, however, Thurman Arnold has been cold to feminine charm and deaf to arguments from Hollywood's high priced legal battery. . . . "

Wonder who told the boys about this? Hollywood didn't!

ACTOR MAKES GOOD

CONSIDERING with friendly approbation the career of success which brings Mr. W. Ray Johnston of Monogram Pictures Corporation to his twenty-fifth anniversary in the motion picture business, one is tempted to dally with the reflection that while not a few of our industry's executives have become unquestionably great actors, Mr. Johnston, uniquely, is the actor who has become a ranking executive. He started, handsome, two-and-twenty, in gallant roles in Thanhouser plays at New Rochelle in 1914. New Rochelle was then "just forty-five minutes from Broadway". Since then, assuredly, our actor has "gone to town".

INHUMAN LANGUAGE

THE Telephone Company, which had so much to do with giving the motion picture the spoken word, has gone on now to a new laboratory triumph in a machine which is made to talk, with an entirely synthetic voice, by playing the keys. They call it the "Voder," that being a contraction and derivative of "voice operation demonstration." The machine can range from a throaty bass to the infant treble and it can say most anything, having some trouble, so far, with the letter "l." This device opens some interesting possibilities. With it maybe Charlie McCarthy can dispense with Mr. Edgar Bergen, and the otherwise artificial Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck perhaps may dispense with their human voices and become one hundred percent synthetic. Further, if the "Voder" should prove to be a star on the air radio might have a lot of business for it. However, just now it would seem that there is plenty of talking being done, using the old fashioned methods and equipment.

GLAMOUR vs. GLAMOR

THE art of the printed word comes upon difficult, trying days with as many digressions as a vine growing in a crannied wall. For exemplification, there's Conde Nast Publications, which not so long ago were able, through the lorgnette, to see only the topmost of the Social Register and maybe, faintly, the best of Bradstreet & Dun, just now announcing for publication beginning in March a new monthly entitled "Glamour." It is said that it will "interpret Hollywood beauty and fashion news and describe and analyze the 'glamour technique' of the various screen stars in terms of the American woman's daily needs."

If they insist on spelling it "glamour"—which is the way we like it—the Tilly-the-Toilers they are shooting at may be confused. "Yen" would be the title, if they want to compete.

This Week

73 State Bills

Seventy-three bills, in 29 states, directly or indirectly affecting the motion picture industry, have been filed, passed, or are pending in the approximately three weeks' existence of the state legislatures. They are the usual variety—sales, use, or service taxes, proposals for regulation of the industry, for legalization or de-legalization of games, for Sunday motion picture shows, ad infinitum—and represent but a small amount of those which will enter the legislative hoppers before the end of this year. They are also but a small amount of the total number of measures affecting the industry, inasmuch as the myriad county, city, town, and village councils have their own mills grinding every day in the year.

A survey of legislative plans and proposals is in the story on page 14.

Suit in Florida

Charging monopoly, a suit for relief and damages of $432,000 against the "Big Eight" was filed this week in Miami by Washington Operating and Garden Operating. Herman Weingarten is president of both companies, which operate the Cameo and Surf theatres, respectively, in the greater Miami area.

Two Florida corporations, Paramount Enterprises, Inc., and Wometco Theatres, Inc., were named defendants with the eight large distributors: Paramount, Loew's, RKO, Warners-Vitagraph, Twentieth Century-Fox, United Artists, Columbia and Universal.

Violation of the Sherman anti-trust and Clayton acts in setting admission prices, releasing advertising, overbuying and unreasonable clearance were charged.

The case may have quick disposition, having been called before Federal Court in Miami for January 31st, with defendant officials already under subpoena to testify at that date.

Filming the King

American newsreel companies, anxious to cover completely the arrival in Canada of the British King George and Queen Elizabeth this Spring, in making their plans have discovered a few difficulties to be hurdled. The Canadian government does not favorably view the use of American newsreel cameramen in the Dominion and has never shown indication of leniency, and the import duty on American sound and camera equipment is high. Newsreel officials, generally, are hopeful the ban and the duty will be lifted, it being the special event that it is, and the British Empire generally desiring to curry good will in this country.

Plans for the impending royal visit are on page 16.

Recasting

Lawyers for the distributing companies are engaged in recasting the 16 point program for trade practice control to conform to changes asked by exhibitor groups. Dates for further negotiations among members of the distributors' committee and representatives of the exhibitor organizations remained uncertain, the distributor representatives being out in the field on company business. Abram F. Myers, counsel for national Allied States Association, is to confer with the distributor attorneys during the recasting but the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association will not reenter the scene until the newly worded program is completed.

The status of trade practice regulation is rehearsed on page 28.

Course in Management

A course in motion picture theatre management will be offered in Syracuse University's College of Business Administration beginning in February, with Harry Unterfort, manager of the Syracuse RKO Schine Keith house as lecturer, under arrangements made with Dean Charles R. Raper. All phases of theatre management, including booking, exploitation, theatre operation and advertising will be covered in the course, for which no regular academic credit will be given.

Reorganization

President Roosevelt called Tuesday for new federal legislation to effect a reorganization of the Federal Communications Commission.

In letters to Senator Wheeler, Democrat, of Montana, and Representative Lea, Democrat, of California, chairmen, respectively of the Senate and House Interstate Commerce Committees, the President asserted that he was thoroughly dissatisfied with the present legal framework and administrative machinery of the commission.

The text of the letter, made public by Mr. Wheeler, follows:

"Although considerable progress has been made as a result of efforts to reorganize the work of the Federal Communications Commission under existing law, I am thoroughly dissatisfied with the present legal framework and administrative machinery of the commission. I have come to the definite conclusion that new legislation is necessary to effectuate a satisfactory reorganization of the commission.

"New legislation is also needed to lay down clear congressional policies on the substantive side—so clear that the new administrative body will have no difficulty in interpreting or administering them."

Current Problems

Howard Dietz, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer director of advertising and publicity, upheld American films in a speech at the New School for Social Research in New York Monday night. Saying that an artist is not required to solve social problems, but merely to state the problem, Mr. Dietz also said that the great liking for foreign films on the part of film critics only stems from the fact that they feel they are a relief from the steady diet of American films.

He said that chance games are a "direct manifestation of the overseated condition of the American movie." Mr. Dietz also expressed the opinion that audience dissatisfaction with Italian product will bring American films back to Italy upon favorable terms.

"Waste of Time"

"This law suit is a waste of time and I'm going to seek dismissal of the entire suit," Robert Golding, attorney for Balaban and Katz and the majors in the Chicago independents' anti-trust suit, said Wednesday in federal court there, when Rosenberg and Stein, attorneys for the plaintiffs, presented a petition seeking to limit defense attorneys, Thomas Thomas, Miles Seley and Mr. Golding, in their questioning of plaintiffs for the taking of depositions. Mr. Golding said that the charges filed in the anti-trust suit failed to "show any special damages," and should be dropped. Judge Michael J. Igoe postponed the hearing on the petition until Judge Wilkerson's return on February 10th.

Block Booking Bills

Counsel for major distributors have filed formal application for Congressional public hearings on pending anti-block booking bills. The requests were filed with the Interstate Commerce Committees of the House and Senate, which as yet, have not acted on them. Similar requests for hearings on the Neely-Pettengill measure last year were rejected on the ground that previous hearings and voluminous testimony on file were sufficient and the bill was passed without a record vote by the Senate, but failed to reach the floor of the House. The pending bills were introduced by Representative Andrew Edmiston of West Virginia in the House and Senator Matthew M. Neely, also of West Virginia, in the Senate. Representative Samuel Pettengill, former champion of the House bill, did not seek reelection. The bills are companion measures.

Wage Law Decision

Contracts with eastern film unions will not be renegotiated because of the Federal Wage and Hour law, union officials and eastern producers have decided. The procedure is the same as that being followed by the west coast unions and studios, which relies on the opinion that properly negotiated labor contracts are not affected by the law. The procedure also covers pacts with the newsreel cameramen's union, which will not be renegotiated at this time.

Pat Casey, producers' labor representative, who remained in New York pending decisions on the renegotiations of contracts, has returned to the coast. He plans to return to New York in March for the annual negotiations with the five international studio unions which are signatories of the basic agreement.

Totalitarian Bloc

American film business in the three countries comprising the "totalitarian cultural" bloc, Germany, Italy and Japan, took a further turn toward virtual extinction this week with new pressures exerted in those countries against Hollywood product. In Germany the relatively small number of American features shown was cut sharply in retaliation for "incessant agitation" in this country; in Italy retaliatory measures were indicated following the refusal of American distributing companies to do business, under intolerable terms, with the Government film monopoly, and in Japan more strict censorship rules were predicted. Further international news indicated that the Spanish Rebel Government of General Francisco Franco had been induced to join the bloc against Hollywood films and "all works considered harmful to either country" (Germany and Italy).

Loew Earnings

Total earnings for Loew's, Inc., including its theatre companies and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, were computed this week at $9,924,934 for the fiscal year ended August 31, 1938. The amount is equal to 5.65 a share and compares with a net of $14,426,062 or $8.46 a share in 1937. Gross revenue from theatre receipts and film rentals reached $122,737,214, some $900,000 more than the $121,828,605 grossed in 1937, but operating income dropped nearly $5,000,000 from $31,149,274 in 1937 to $26,937,201 in 1938, because of heavier amortization and write-off of film costs.

The statistics are reviewed and compared on page 43.

World's Fair Film

Motion Picture companies will be asked again by a committee of New York World's Fair officials to make a feature film on the fair grounds, according to a three-part plan adopted at a meeting of officials of the fair and artists of the amusement industry held at the fair grounds this week. Three resolutions were adopted at the meeting to strengthen the amusement features of the fair. One authorized the appointment of a committee to confer with film producers to arrange production of a complete film on the fair grounds. A second calls for the formation of plans to stage legitimate productions and vaudeville in the fair, and the third for appointment of a committee to induce sponsors to broadcast from the grounds.

United Artists Plans

The United Artists stockholders' meeting broke up last week in an entirely harmonious spirit, and with some announcements calculated to make the news columns of the trade journals—especially the announcement of the new "profit sharing" plan for the distributors, whereby their payment of distribution costs decreases according to the revenue which their pictures bring in; the announcements that Alexander Korda would produce in Hollywood this summer; that Walter Wanger would make six pictures; that Edward Small would produce from about six to eight pictures; and other items detailing the Korda schedule, the confidence with which the company looks to the coming year, and the stay of Mr. Silverstone on the coast, to hold conferences with Mr. Goldwyn, Mr. John Hay Whitney and Mr. Selznick, and others, out of which meetings more interesting news about the industry's most prolific producer of purely "A" pictures, is expected to come.

Chorus of Criticism

Every branch of the motion picture industry in Great Britain now is hammering away at the 1938 Films Act. Exhibitors have formed a new committee to study the workings of the measure with special regard to shortage of product, redundancy and booking complications. Producers, through the press, are demanding a separate quota or an increase in the renters' quota. American distributors have pointed out to the Board of Trade that the Act operates against quality in production and that its multiple quota provisions are weighing down the producer-distributors.

Americanism, Motion Pictures and A WARNER CREED

EARLY last fall at the American Legion convention in Los Angeles Harry Warner made a speech on patriotism which earned him great kudos from the war veterans and from the patriotic organizations. That speech focused the attention of the industry and of the public at large on plans underway for some time at the Warner studios in Burbank under the immediate supervision of Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production. Now the program has been intensified. Energy, time, talent and considerable budgetary attention are being paid to the production of short subjects in color on significant events in the history of the country as well as incorporation of the theme of patriotism into several features, a policy which, as Jack Warner explains in the accompanying pictorial interview, is scarcely new with the company.

"What you call the Warner Americanism movement is no new thing," Mr. Warner began. "We started it in 1918 with 'My Four Years in Germany', the picture that started this company on its way, and we've been at it ever since. We'll be at it as long as there's a Warner in the picture business."

"We're interested in showing what's been going on here since 1612 and keeping it going on. Yes, you could call it defensive Americanism—we aim to do our part in preserving the United States as is and in making Americans conscious of their heritage."

"Particularly in troubled times like these, the film industry's obligation does not end with the making of great entertainment. It must, of its own volition, render patriotic service to the nation as well. . . . We will film, with fidelity and vigor, the great events which highlight our nation's history."

Mr. Warner outlines specific plans illustrating what he means to William R. Weaver, Motion Picture Herald Hollywood editor, the interviewer. "We'll make more Americanism features for 1939-40, two more service pictures we're preparing now, an Army and Navy picture, and we'll have about six others with patriotic significance predominant. . . . Warner Brothers will definitely do its part in making Americans conscious of their great heritage of freedom."

> "EVERY producer, in common with every other citizen, owes it to the land of liberty to preserve its principles and doctrine."
> —JACK L. WARNER

"Yes, there are some exhibitors, taking our service, who tell us they haven't got screen time to run our Americanism shorts, and blame double features for it. We've got 530 theatres, lots of them running double features too, but they've got standing orders to run the Americanism shorts if they've got to kill the second feature to do it. Any exhibitor who hasn't enough love for the rights of man to run an Americanism short isn't an American."

The discussion is adjourned to the dining room and Mr. Warner continues: "Flag-waving stage plays whose popularity is based on popular tunes reach thousands. Films reach millions."

"Our Americanism pictures are not propaganda. They give instructive information in entertainment form and send people out of the theatre knowing not only that this is a good country but how it got that way and why. . . . Events as significant as those which constitute American history afford perfect screen material. . . . The policy of the United States is at all times the policy of Warner Brothers."

"Our Americanism pictures teach people what freedom of worship, of speech, freedom of the press and the right of peaceful assembly really are by showing them how and why the nation's founders came to guarantee them in that piece of paper they called the Bill of Rights."

73 FILM BILLS PENDING OR SCHEDULED IN 29 STATES

Exhibition Chiefly Affected by Measures Introduced or Prepared; Then There's Host of Municipal Proposals

Seventy-three bills directly or indirectly affecting the motion picture business, principally exhibition, have been introduced or set for introduction in 29 state legislatures since January 1st—and the 1939 sessions still have at least five weeks to run. No measures affecting films have appeared to date in the remaining 15 of the 44 states meeting this year.

Many Perennials

Not all the measures are inimical to the industry, but few are outside that category. Only a small number stand any chance of enactment, however. The hoppers contain many perennials which, with the newly proposed measures, cover the range of film legislative subjects: Bills to divorce exhibition from distribution, bills for or against Sunday showings, censorship and admission taxes, special levies on exchange operations, on film footage and whatnot, measures providing for special theatre inspection, employment of projectionists, regulation of theatre air conditioning systems, spacing between theatre seats, advertising on screens, taxation or abolition of outdoor advertising, chance games, licensing of theatrical bookers, issuance of passes, and so on, and so on. Indirect taxation is one of the bulkiest items, through special taxes, sales taxes, "use" taxes, "chain store" taxes and others.

The Oases States

States where no bills affecting the industry have been proposed thus far include: Alabama, Arizona, Idaho, Iowa, Maryland, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Utah, and West Virginia.

The four states not having any legislative session scheduled are Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi and Virginia. All the remaining 29 have on their calendars legislative items affecting the industry.

Moreover, the crop listed here does not include the scores of bills proposed, passed, or pending in counties, cities, towns, and villages, which represent as wide, or wider, a display of the ingenuity used by lawmakers in their struggle to rule, regulate, or merely tax the myriad phases of the industry. Much of the legislation noted, and duplicated or "improved upon" in the smaller governmental units, has an indirect bearing on the industry, but a bearing none the less important. Bills proposing indirect taxation may affect the patrons of a theatre, its services, its supplies. Taxation bills, especially, are susceptible to wide interpretation and amendment, by state lawmakers; tax bills that start in legislatures without mention of theatres, have been known to affect them seriously by the time of passage.

"POLITICAL" CENSORING HIT AND APPROVED

Representative Harry Dworkin, of Cleveland, has introduced in the Ohio legislature an amendment to the state law prohibiting the censoring of pictures because of their political content. The amendment was prepared after Dworkin had viewed a private screening of the Soviet film "Professor Mamlock," which the censor board has banned from being show in Ohio.

Demand for legislative relief, from the present status of radio stations, whereby stations cannot limit libelous remarks in political broadcasts, will be made of Congress by the broadcasting industry, Neville Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, said last Thursday at the meeting of the 14th district of the N.A.B. in Denver. Mr. Miller said that radio stations do not want to be censors, but want to be able to protect themselves from libel actions by determining what should or should not be broadcast.

The outdoor ad tax in this bill would tax signs in excess of three square feet at the rate of one cent per square foot for each sign, per year. This same bill has been introduced into the Assembly.

INDUSTRY COOPERATES, SAYS CENSOR HEAD

"There has been such willing and close cooperation on the part of the producers that a 'cut' is a rare occasion any more. Films have vastly approved." With these remarks Mrs. Eleanore Walton the other day assumed the title of chief of the Kansas City Board of Film Review, a post left vacant by the death of Guy Holmes. Mrs. Walton had assisted Mr. Holmes for four years.

" 'Bootleg' films are about the only ones that give us any considerable trouble now," she continued. "These are brought to the city under the cover of secrecy and are sold to exhibitors who are willing to take a chance in order to show films that will pack crowds interested in risque pictures. However, we soon round them up and that business has become too hazardous to be common."

Frankfurter Hearing Recorded for Screen

"Newsreels give the screen the prerogatives of the press." Here are Washington cameramen—from Movietonews, News of the Day, Paramount, Pathe, Universal—recording for screens today and posterity the Senate Judiciary Committee's hearing on Dr. Felix Frankfurter's political and other beliefs before acting on his nomination to the supreme court. On extreme left sits Dr. Frankfurter, Vienna-born Harvard law professor and author of books on government and law. That's Senator Matthew Neely, sponsor of anti-block booking bills, on the right. U.S. REELS PREPARING FOR COVERAGE OF KING

Companies Seek Let Up of Canadian Restrictions on "Outside" Cameramen, Equipment

Preparing for what the newsreels hope will be one of the most elaborate newsreel picturizations in two decades, on the occasion of the visit of King George and Queen Elizabeth to Canada, in May, the American newsreel companies now are attempting, through official and other channels, to have the Canadian Government relax its restrictions on "outside" producers and cameramen and equipment.

Newsreel men see in the story great pictorial possibilities of raiment, ceremonies and receptions, and a story which, for the newsreels, had its beginning two years ago, at their Majesties' coronation in England, where first all-color American newsreels were produced.

Designed by the Dominion Government to "protect Canadian workers and industry," Canada strictly enforces a series of custom duties and labor laws which virtually prohibit the working in Canada of cameramen from the United States and the importation of equipment.

One of the most notable instances of conflict with Canada's restrictions by an American company was Twentieth Century-Fox's experience when it first attempted to film the Dionne Quintuplets, even after it had purchased exclusive feature filming rights. Fox was able to proceed only after it engaged Canadian cameramen in similar number to its own Hollywood staff, and after meeting other requirements.

The duty in Canada on American 35 mm. cameras, used by "professional cameramen for producers having studios in Canada" formerly was on a sliding scale of from 10 to 22 per cent ad valorem. This was reduced by the American Canadian reciprocal trade treaty, signed last fall, to a fixed rate of 10 per cent. However, newsreel officials point out that other customs duties apply to lenses, and to other parts of camera and sound equipment, thus raising the actual duty required and making imperative a careful listing and accounting of all equipment to be sent across the border, a situation to which they do not want to submit.

The royal pair from England will travel in a special train, one coach of which will serve as a traveling laboratory for news cameramen, who will be under the supervision of Mr. F. C. Badgley, director of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau. American newsreel managers see in this possibilities of strong editorial direction of their cameramen's efforts, with no "promiscuous" shooting allowed.

The American newsreels have delayed completion of plans on the number of men, type of equipment, footage to be used, and methods of transmitting film to processing bases in the United States partly because of their inability to ascertain whether they will be able to send cameramen of their own, or will have to depend on the usual source of supply for newsreel shots from Canada, the Associated Screen News, in Montreal.

Jack Haney, news editor of Twentieth Century-Fox Movietone News, said:

"We face some difficulties. I suppose attempts are being made to have the duty lifted, but I don't know in just what manner. There really seems to be no precedent for lifting the ban on American newsreel cameramen."

At Pathe News, Walton Ament, editor, said, "We will probably send two camera crews, one sound and one silent; that's three and two men, respectively, and they will be supplemented at certain spots with additional crews."

William P. Montague, assignment editor of Paramount News, noted the same difficulties.

Thomas Mead, of Universal newsreel, said the company probably would send one crew, if permitted; that crew to consist of a sound man, cameraman and electrician.

Only Nova Scotia thus far has shown a disposition to allow American companies to operate, according to newsreel officials.

BANK WILL DELIVER "QUIZ" WINNER LISTS

Harold B. Franklin's "Motion Pictures' Greatest Year" headquarters in New York issued the following statement on Tuesday:

"So as to insure the fullest dependability, arrangements have been made so that the list of winners of the $250,000 'Movie Quiz' contest will be delivered to theatres, who participated in the Motion Pictures' Greatest Year Campaign, promptly at eight o'clock on Monday evening, February 20th, throughout the United States and Canada, through the facilities of the Chemical Bank and Trust Company of New York.

"Through their correspondents, the Chemical Bank and Trust Company will deliver a confidential list of winners to the manager of each theatre that paid its pledge. Mr. J. J. Cunliffe, in charge of the Times Square Branch of the Bank, is supervising this undertaking.

"This is the first time that bank facilities have been used for such a purpose. Through such simultaneous delivery, every exhibitor will receive the information at the same time."

"TOTALITARIAN" STATES PUT FURTHER "SQUEEZE" ON HOLLYWOOD'S FILMS

General Franco Reported Joining Bloc of Germany, Italy and Japan Against U. S. Product; Tokyo Tightening Reins

American motion pictures this week were subjected to further attack, direct and otherwise, by the German-Italian-Japanese bloc for a cultural, economic and military front. In those nations the position of Hollywood already had been weakened by a favored country alliance on motion picture exhibition.

Germany has decreed an additional curb on Hollywood films, Japan has taken up the question of even stricter censorship of "outside" films, and Italy has selected Vittorio Mussolini, son of the dictator, to operate Cinema, its largest film trade publication, in Rome, already vocatively sensitive to the American companies' withdrawal from Italy on December 31st in answer to Italy's new laws virtually prohibiting them from continuing in business.

In addition to their own individual actions, the so-called "totalitarian" countries apparently have induced the Insurgent Spain of General Francisco Franco to join their "cultural" bloc against Hollywood films "and all works considered harmful to either country."

Treaty with Insurgents

A treaty providing for a general "cultural" exchange between Germany and Insurgent Spain was disclosed last Friday by Associated Press in a dispatch from the news service of Dienst aus Deutschland in Berlin. Although not yet signed, the treaty was said to be "near ratification."

Italy, too, is almost certain to effect a similar agreement with the Insurgents, not only because of the "cultural" treaty which it has with Germany, but because of the support enjoyed by Franco from Italy in his war with Loyalist Spain.

"The treaty contains 22 articles," continued the dispatch from Berlin, "and special provisions are made for avoidance of currency difficulties. An extensive system of exchanging professors is to be set up and study of one another's languages fostered.

"Also, a general system of trading music, motion pictures and radio programs is to be put in operation and a mutual plan placed on 'emigrant literature.' "

Nazis "Squeeze" Hollywood

What little remains of American film companies' operations in Germany is now faced with extinction as the result of even more drastic "boycott" orders against Hollywood films.

Reporting from Berlin Monday, Associated Press said, "A source close to the Nazi Government said tonight that the number of American films shown in German theatres had been cut sharply in retaliation for 'incessant agitation' against Germany." The motion picture business in Hollywood has been campaigning vigorously of late for an official American Government economic boycott against Germany and everything therefrom. In addition, several Hollywood producers have undertaken the production of anti-Nazi films, led by Warners' "Confessions of a Nazi Spy," and "The Bishop Who Walked with God," this one based upon the activities of the Reverend Dr. Martin Niemoller, head of the Lutheran Church in Germany, who has been persecuted by the Nazis.

The Berlin source, continued Associated Press, summed up what amounted to a tacit boycott of American films as follows: "Incessant agitation in the United States against the Third Reich, which among other things has hampered the showing of the Olympics film otherwise received throughout the world with the greatest applause and which forced Hollywood film artists to sign an inflammatory declaration against Germany, has brought an understandable reaction in the film industry in Germany." It is pointed out that for the first time in years none of the first-run theatres in Berlin is showing an American picture. Two first-run French films are being shown, according to Associated Press.

Business Called Negligible

When the Nazis started attacking "outside" influences, racial, economic and otherwise, and effected stringent prohibitions against Hollywood product, all American companies, with the exception of Twentieth Century-Fox, Paramount and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer either were forced to abandon operations or else withdraw.

Today, the business of the remaining three is described in New York as almost negligible, except their newsreel circulation, which is understood to be wide.

With offices still operating in Berlin, the three companies have noted a continuous decline in their feature business, and in order to export income from that and newsreel bookings, they are compelled to pay the Nazis approximately 75 per cent of the total to be exported, giving each no more than between $15,000 to $50,000 annually from the market.

Following opinions expressed by American representatives in Japan that a lightening of film restrictions in that country could be expected (Motion Picture Herald, January 21st, page 22), came a wireless to the New York Times this week from Tokyo stating that the Japanese authorities are considering new measures to establish "effective film censorship" in dealing with the "international cinema warfare." The step was suggested by "recent developments," continued the dispatch.

Five Majors Spent $1,087,615 On Magazine Advertising in 1938

Five of the largest motion picture companies together spent $1,087,615 for advertising in national magazines in 1938. This was $317,423 more than their combined magazine ad expenditure of $770,192 in 1937. Newspaper ad expenditures were not lessened for the magazine increase, although figures on newspaper advertising are not available for comparison. Film companies continued in 1938 to be non-advertisers on radio.

Advertising Age, in compiling advertising expenditures of advertisers using $100,000 or more of magazine space during the past four years, lists Paramount, Warner Brothers, Twentieth Century-Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and United Artists, in that order, as the largest magazine advertisers in the film business in 1938, basing its compilation on records of Publishers Information Bureau, Inc.

The four-year comparison follows:

COMPANY	1935	1936	1937	1938
Paramount	$ 59,780	$103,037	$212,530	$ 369,454
Warner Brothers	62,118	233,621	113,661	251,302
United Artists	67,568	44,867	104,957	138,478
Metro-Goldwyn	452,149	307,484	238,433	153,899
20th Century-Fox	83,300	126,563	100,611	174,482
TOTALS	$724,915	$815,572	$770,192	$1,087,615

Presented for purposes of comparison are the four-year expenditures of America's No. 1 magazine advertisers, General Motors, which, in 1935, spent $5,442,668; in 1936, $7,289,547; 1937, $6,993,325; 1938, $4,121,649.

Film Donations Swell Fund for Refugees

The funds being used for German and other European refugees of all faiths are being augmented by several motion picture donations. Heavy demand for tickets has forced the extension of the time limit of the drive to be conducted by the Motion Picture Art Fund for German Refugees from February 12th to March 15th, with tickets for the sale available at home offices and exchanges of all film companies.

The Joint Distribution Committee for German Refugees will receive $500, the excess over expenses for the recent dinner given in honor of J. Meyer and Louis Schine, and another $500 from the Schines and $250 from Walter Reade, Sr. On Thursday all admissions from 325 theatres in six southern states will be donated to aid European refugees, while in Atlanta all receipts from the 39 houses on February 2nd in the Bailey-Starr circuit will go to the fund for German Refugees, according to Milton Starr. Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has become a member of the national committee sponsoring the concert tour of Mischa Elman, violinist, for the benefit of German refugees of all faiths. Alfred E. Smith is honorary chairman of the committee and Paul D. Cravath honorary treasurer.

INDIVIDUAL AGREEMENTS HALT STRIKE ON RADIO

Wrigley Company First to Sign Radio Artists' Code on Practices and Salaries

The "united front" of the American Association of Advertising Agencies crumbled this week under the threat by American radio performers of a nationwide strike for better hours-and-wage conditions. The threat had been forcibly emphasized when the radio locals in key cities, of the American Federation of Radio Artists, had supported the national board in the strike idea. Now the union is making agreements with individual network program sponsors.

The Radio Artists' locals in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco had voted unanimously for a strike, unless the advertising agencies' association accepted the AFRA's fair practice code and adjusted salaries upward.

If a strike does develop, it seems likely that it will be over the AFRA shop principle, which the agencies are reported as refusing to countenance, on the grounds that it is a closed shop, whereas AFRA claims that it is open like the Screen Actors Guild shop.

Wrigley Company Signs

The first signatory to the AFRA code was the William Wrigley Company, through its advertising agencies, the Neisser-Myerhof Company and the Frances Hooper Agency. Without revealing additional signers, officials of the union said this week that many additional New York agencies were willing to sign, and that some already had signed the code. Backed by the approval of its local units, the union's national board is still free to call a strike against those agencies not willing to sign, it was said.

The union had walked out of the meeting with the "fact finding committee" of the AAAA, and the national board of the artists then submitted the strike proposal to a vote by the local units. Now the union has dropped dealings with the agencies as a unit, and it is not anticipated at the present time that the AAAA again will be dealt with by union representatives, until a substantial number of contracts have been signed with its individual members.

Code Issued in Printed Form

The fair practice code, providing for modifications dictated by individual circumstances, was issued this week in a printed form. In sessions with the AAAA committee up to two weeks ago, the union had asked for a basic wage of $15 for actors and announcers on a 15 minute program; $25 for the same on a a half-hour program, and $35 for one-hour programs; also a rehearsal rate of $6 per hour.

Miss Frances Perkins, U. S. Secretary of Labor, had offered to mediate in the proposed strike, this interest bringing a conciliator for the Labor Department, Charles J. Post, to New York on Saturday to talk with representatives of the AFRA and the AAAA. Mr. Post this week returned to Washington with his preliminary findings.

In a letter made public on Saturday, Frank Hummert, the New York head of the Blackett-Sample-Hummert agency, largest purchasers of radio time for advertising sponsors, agreed with the AFRA stand to fix a "fair rate" of pay.

Mr. Post had urged the arrangement of nationwide conferences and the arrival at a fair practice code, of which not only the union but all parties concerned in the production of radio shows would be the authors.

The AFRA national board met on Monday to consider the situation, and to study the Wrigley contract.

Last week, while the radio union's locals were meeting to vote on the strike, allied actor's organizations were passing resolutions of sympathy and promises of support. Among these were the American Federation of Actors, the Screen Actors Guild, the international board of the Actors and Artistes of America, the Actors Equity, the Chorus Equity and the American Guild of Musical Artists.

Eddie Cantor is president of the AFRA.

Signing of RKO Plan Seen Feb. 4

Provided that sufficient consents are still on file, federal judge William Bondy on February 4, or shortly thereafter, will sign a final confirmation of his order approving the RKO reorganization plan, sponsored by the Atlas Company and their adherents. Judge Bondy's approval was signed last week, copies were mailed to creditors and stockholders, and the order inserted in a newspaper, in the form of an advertisement.

Minority creditors and stockholders, who, during the long series of hearings in New York City's federal court, had objected to, and delayed, the approval of the Atlas plan, this week filed new exceptions.

As the directorate of the reorganized company now stands, with a decision still to be made on whether the board is to have 11 or 15 members, George Schaefer, president, and Ned Depinet, vice president, would serve on the directorate representing the management; General James Harbord and L. P. Yandell would represent the RCA interests; Floyd Odlum and Peter J. Rathvon would vote for the Atlas interests, and W. G. Van Schmus and possibly another, for the Rockefellers; Lawrence Green would represent the unsecured creditors, and Fred Ehrman the Lehman interests.

RKO is expected to show $125,000 net profit for the 1938 season, according to current estimates, susceptible to last minute revisions. This amount is exclusive of the approximately $700,000 which will be provided for payment on the company's outstanding six per cent debentures.

Writers File More Charges

Adding to their list of complaints charging the producers with coercive methods, the members of the Screen Writers' Guild in Hollywood who are attempting to force the studios to bargain with them collectively, on Tuesday filed ten more charges with the National Labor Relations Board.

"SNOW WHITE" NOW IN METROPOLITAN MUSEUM

Walt Disney, through his "Snow White," has joined the ranks of the old masters and the leading contemporary artists in getting the much-coveted honor of a place in New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art. One of the original scenes from "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," painted on celluloid, will be hung in the Museum next month. Harry B. Wehle, curator of painting at the Metropolitan, has said that Mr. Disney "is a great historical figure in the development of American art."

Union Asks Green to Act In St. Louis Inquiry

The Central Trades and Labor Union in St. Louis on Sunday adopted a resolution asking William F. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, to intervene in affairs of the Moving Picture Machine Operators Union No. 143, in connection with which John P. Nick and Edward M. Brady, a member of the Missouri legislature, were indicted. The federal Government is now investigating Mr. Nick's affairs.

A representative of George F. Browne, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators, was in St. Louis this week.

Continuing the pace set at its first showing, at the Roxy, New York, Twentieth Century-Fox's "Jesse James" rounded out its second week with 300,000 paid admissions during the three snowstorms of the period, and went into a third week, with a fourth likely.

The home office reported admission and attendance records broken at Los Angeles, St. Louis, Detroit, Cleveland, Houston, Fort Worth, Oklahoma City, Baltimore, Kansas City, Tulsa, Scranton, Wilkes Barre, Portland, Ore., New Haven, Bridgeport, Hartford, Miami, Salt Lake City and Philadelphia.

"Camouflaged Un-Americanisms" Threaten U. S., Says Exhibitor

To Martin Quigley:

I have just read the article in the Jan. 14, 1939, issue of the Herald entitled "What do you mean—democracy?" and wish to compliment you on your stand toward "Films for Democracy".

So many un-Americanisms are camouflaged under just such names as this that the people of America cannot be too cautious when asked to support such organizations.

In the third paragraph from the last in a letter written you by Percival Wilde I would gather that this organization was somewhat Communistic; or, if it weren't, it is certainly helping the Communists unintentionally. Quoting from the above mentioned paragraph in Mr. Wilde's letter, it reads: "At the dinner referred to there was speech-making of an anti-Nazi and anti-Fascist character. Communism was not mentioned, nor were any doctrines of a Communist character expressed."

That is exactly the way Communism and other foreign "isms" are worked. First they select a name that will attract the most people (whether this name represents their purpose or not). Next they get their members so thoroughly sold upon the menace of, say, Fascism, that the organizers (perhaps Communists) can safely bore from within and spread their ruthless propaganda upon the unsuspecting people.

Although it is known that Fascism and Nazism are relatively new menaces, this does not mean that we should focus our fight against them and leave Communism unhampered in its works. Communism is as bad or worse than Fascism and Nazism and we must fight all "isms" that are un-American.—T. Pete Allen, Allen Theatre, Martin, S. D.

Toronto Theatres Gained in 1938

Total receipts of motion picture theatres in Toronto for 1938 were $5,653,300, compared with $5,198,300 for the previous year, an increase of 8.8 per cent, while paid admissions were up 1.8 per cent for the year to 22,710,763. The combined seating capacity of the 105 theatres is 85,799 and the percentage of average occupancy was 35.2, the possible aggregate attendance for the 52 weeks being 64,497,740.

Toronto, as a whole, held the highest average attendance for the year of any city in the Dominion, Vancouver, with 29 theatres, being second in the list with 33.3 per cent seats occupied at all performances. Montreal, with 66 theatres having a combined seating capacity of 69,406, had an average of 25.9 per cent in seat usage for the 365 days, the theatres in that city being open on Sundays as well as week days.

The total gross receipts of film theatres in Canada in 1937 were $32,499,300, according to a survey by the Census of Merchandising and Service Establishments, only now being released. The total attendance was put at 134,374,061. The 1937 figures showed a 5.4 per cent gain in admissions and a 9.8 per cent gain in receipts over the 1936 figures.

The number of theatres in operation was 1,047, an increase of 88 over 1936. There were 5,294 male and 1,656 female employees in Canadian theatres in 1937. The payroll for 1937 was $5,627,300, an increase of $698,600 over the previous year.

The Department of Commerce in Washington reported this week that there was an increase of $28,000 in films exported into Canada during the first 10 months of 1938 compared to the same period in 1937.

Universal Heads at Coast Meeting

Universal's new season production plans are being taken up during the studio conference now under way and attended by Nate J. Blumberg, president; William A. Scully, vice-president and sales manager; Matthew Fox, vice-president; Cliff Work, studio head, and John Joseph, advertising and publicity director. The company has signed Charles Boyer to play opposite Deanna Durbin in "First Love," which will follow "Three Smart Girls Grow Up," now shooting, and has assigned Rowland V. Lee to produce and direct "The Sun Never Sets," which is said to be budgeted at $800,000.

The conferences will decide whether Universal will make more or fewer films in 1939-40 than its customary 36 features and six westerns, and also the exact contributions to be made to the program by Harry Edington, whose first picture to be made for the company, starring Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., was announced recently.

Sheaffer Acquires "U" Shares

Daniel M. Sheaffer, of Philadelphia, a director of Universal, acquired 2,000 shares of the company's common stock during the month of September, it has been disclosed by the Securities and Exchange Commission. At the end of September the S. E. C. reported Mr. Sheaffer as holding 230,927 shares of the company's common stock, 220 shares of the first preferred and 20,000 shares of the second preferred. Also reported was the deposition in October of 3,000 shares of Trans-Lux Corporation common stock, by H. P. Farrington, New York, director. Mr. Farrington still held 5,000 shares at the end of the month.

U.S. Admission Tax Up $35,249 For December

Federal admission tax collections in December totaled $2,020,376.64, a $35,249 increase over the $1,985,127.78 reported for November but considerably below the December, 1937, total of $2,290,027.37, it was disclosed Tuesday by the Internal Revenue Bureau at Washington.

The bureau gives a preliminary total for the calendar year 1938 of $19,661,336.74 compared with $20,974,031.33 for 1937, a loss of $1,312,694. Most of the loss was piled up after July 1, collections for the last half of the year being only $10,314,574.34 compared with $11,454,017.09 in the same months of 1937, a drop of $1,139,442.75.

However, it was revealed, the trend in admission taxes was in line with the experience with other levies, 49 out of 68 classes of taxes showing losses for the last half of 1938 as compared with 1937.

In only two months in 1938 did admission tax collections exceed those of the corresponding periods of the previous year, bureau statistics show. Collections throughout 1937 ran well ahead of 1936, the total being approximately $2,500,000 better than 1936's $18,457,482. January, 1938, however, was under the same month of 1937, and after increases were recorded in February and March, the following months of the year showed a level of business consistently below that of 1937.

The monthly collections, compared with the corresponding months in 1937, as shown by the bureau's preliminary figures, were as follows:

	1938	1937
January	$1,353,415	$1,505,676
February	1,659,640	1,473,352

WPA Ejects Strikers from Its New York Art Theatre

Refusing to allow "sit down" strike tactics on its own property, the Federal Government early Tuesday morning, through the use of 50 WPA guards, forcefully ejected from the Federal Music Theatre in New York City, about eighty persons, mostly women, who had been staging a protest against the dismissal of 1,500 stage workers of the Federal Arts Project, last week. The objectors, members of the Fine Arts Project Council of the Workers' Alliance, entered the theatre early Monday evening, and listened hourly to the pleas of Paul Edwards, director of the arts project, that they leave the house peaceably.

Adolph Zukor, Paramount head in England, is short-wave broadcasting "inside-the-front-lines" stories about film making in Europe this week. The first was on Thursday night at 9 (4 P. M. New York time). The second will be Friday night from Ireland at 8 (3 P. M. New York).

The First Place Votes

Comparatively few votes were received by the leaders in some territories, but the total from all the cities elevated them to their position in the final list.

Miss MacDonald led with 29 cities in which she was voted the favorite. Miss Henie received highest votes in eight cities; Miss Loy in six; Miss Davis in three; Miss Young in two, and Shirley Temple and Norma Shearer were ranked highest in reader appreciation in one city each.

Comparison between this year's poll and last year's shows that Spencer Tracy, who ranked fifth last year, advanced in popularity to third place on the voting this year. Myrna Loy, named "Queen" last year, ranked third this year.

The Daily News poll, in conjunction with the 50 other papers, was conducted as a "one-day election," on Sunday, January 15th. The entries were to be submitted by January 19th through the use of a coupon inserted in the newspapers.

The News coupon, headed "King and Queen of the Movies, 1939," had spaces for the insertion of the names of the three favorite male and three favorite feminine stars, in order of preference. Pictures of 14 stars were included in the News layout accompanying the coupon; these stars were Clark Gable, Shirley Temple, Myrna Loy, Jeanette MacDonald, Paul Muni, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Bette Davis, Joan Crawford, Tyrone Power, Sonja Henie, Carole Lombard, Greta Garbo and Ronald Colman.

Rules of the voting, printed on the coupon, were:

Voting was scored by points; first choice, three points; second, two points; third, one point.

The results of The News poll are contrasted with that of MOTION PICTURE HERALD in the box on this page. In the HERALD study the exhibitors were asked to name 10 players "whose pictures drew the greatest number" of patrons to the boxoffice, in the motion picture year from September 1 of one year to September 1 of the next. The winners were determined by a point system, first place receiving 10 points; second, nine, and so on down the list, tenth place receiving one point. The News poll was a popularity poll; the HERALD poll was a translation of box office totals into relative rankings as money-makers. In the HERALD survey more than 200 players were mentioned.

The nationwide poll conducted by the 50 newspapers in as many cities and towns of the United States and Canada, listed the following "King" and "Queen" winners:

LAWYERS START RECASTING TRADE PROGRAM; NO ENACTMENT DATE SET

MPTOA Wants Immediate Enforcement, Distributors Favor Delay, Allied Silent; Myers to Meet Lawyers of Both Sides

The large companies' 16-point program for self-regulating distribution and exhibition was this week in the hands of the companies' lawyers for recasting, to conform to changes demanded by exhibitors, after months of unsuccessful efforts by the distributors to get approval from committees of organized theatre owners.

Enactment Date Uncertain

A date of enactment stands as uncertain today as it was when the distributors started writing the draft last summer. Speculation mentions three possibilities: (1) enforcement upon enactment; (2) enforcement made retroactive to the beginning of this 1938-39 season; or, (3) enforcement at the beginning of 1939-40. The MPTOA wants immediate enforcement, the distributors hope for a delay until 1939-40. Allied has not stated its position on this specific matter.

Nor can any determination be made at this time as to when the negotiating committees for the distributors and various exhibitor groups will reassemble for final negotiations on the exhibitors' acceptance. With the film lawyers taking on the assignment to recast, and the distributors' negotiators now virtually all out in the field on company business, the next contact between the distribution executives and the exhibitors is not likely for another three weeks, or more.

In the interim, Abram F. Myers, chief counsel for Allied States, is to talk with the lawyers in an attempt by both sides to bargain successfully on Allied's demands for revisions and more concessions as the new draft is being written. Allied's negotiators have until March 1st to report back to the board.

MPTOA Awaits New Proposals

The MPTOA is not to reenter the negotiating picture until after the lawyers have finished the recasting, when the pact again will revert to the distributors' negotiating committee, inasmuch as MPTOA's principal request is for a clarification of the language to eliminate the vagueness which it claims exists in the present phraseology. In its new and anticipated clearer language, MPTOA is virtually certain to accept.

Not so certain, however, is Allied's acceptance, for at its board of directors' meeting in Washington last week Allied officially stated that the distributors' program was no more acceptable than it had been when first presented in November, before negotiations between the two, and that now, "our committee has been informed, so far as the substance is concerned, the distributors are agreed that they have gone as far as they will go."

Steffes Denies New Allied Version

Reports in New York that Allied would write its own version of a program, and present that to the distributors, were denied Friday by W. A. Steffes, Allied vice-president from the Northwest, who visited New York after the Washington meeting.

One of the stumbling blocks in the recasting of the program by the lawyers is their divergent opinions on the legal status of arbitration or conciliation for regulating the program and practices mentioned therein.

In any event, the distributors' new draft is expected to eliminate the present "Clause 14," which was the cause of the most complaints from exhibitors. It "condemns" falsification of box office grosses by owners when figuring on the distributors' share on percentage pictures. The exhibitors charged it was a reflection on their honesty.

"Radical Changes" Coming, Says Col. Cole, New Allied President

Colonel H. A. Cole, of Texas, took on the presidency of Allied States this week with some definite expressions on the where-and-how of future procedure and practice in the motion picture business.

He foresees "radical changes" in the industry within the next two years, either the result of governmental pressure or industry self-regulation, "or even both".

"We (Allied) hope, naturally, that when the new structure arises, only the bad will be destroyed and the good remain. We all are a part of the industry; we certainly don't want to see it destroyed."

Colonel Cole expressed belief that the Senate would pass the Neely anti-block booking bill, and that the Edmiston Bill, a companion to it in the House, would overcome anticipated difficulties in consideration by a House committee, under "pressure" from exhibitor groups and others.

That the inquiry by the Government into alleged monopolies in general business eventually will include the film industry is a certainty, he declared.

(Thurman S. Arnold, assistant United States attorney general, who is in charge of the Government's anti-trust action against the majors, is also a member of the committee investigating monopolies for the Government.)

In order to keep a closer watch on legislative activities in Washington, Colonel Cole has appointed Martin Smith, president of Ohio Allied and a regional vice-president of national Allied, to be chairman of the national organization's legislative and litigation committee, a post which the Colonel occupied prior to his accession to the presidency of Allied. (Picture in Pictorial Section.)

Colonel Cole will maintain closer contact with the state units. His first move in this direction was his attendance at a special meeting Monday, in Chicago, of the directors of Illinois Allied.

Allied will form new units, in Kansas, Western Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, and possibly Arkansas, he said. There are now 21 units.

Jack Kirsch, president of Illinois Allied, has accepted the vice-presidency for Allied in the West Central States, said Colonel Cole, adding that other regional vice-presidents would be chosen, following a realignment of districts.

Southeast Accepts Nine Of 16 Program Articles

Nine of 16 articles in the distributors' trade practice program are accepted without change by the Southeastern Theatre Owners' Association, an MPTOA affiliate, six were singled out for modification or clarification and one was rejected in entirety, it is shown in a report submitted by the organization to the MPTOA executive committee. The report is said to be characteristic of those received from other MPTOA units.

Article 14, relating to the return of "false" reports on box-office receipts for percentage bookings, was rejected in its entirety. Articles accepted without change include those on trade announcements, exhibitors' limited playing time, runs and existing customers, forcing of shorts, newsreels or trailers, picture allocations, non-theatrical competition, forms of license agreement, selective contracts and playing of pictures in order of release.

Suggested changes include a 21 instead of a 10-day period for notifying distributors of intention of cancelling an available picture, and 21 instead of 14 days for giving notice of picture rejections on grounds of community offensiveness, both applying to Article 1, covering cancellation. In Article 4 on preferred playing time, 10 days instead of five days is asked for giving notice that the exhibitor regards a designated picture unsuitable for the playing time designated.

Simplification of the score charge article and Article 13, on acquisition of theatres, is asked. Article 15, on arbitration, is accepted subject to working out details of the procedure by exhibitor and distributor negotiating committees. Simplification of Article 16 on effective date of the program is also suggested.

W. C. Moore is president of the Southeastern MPTO.

Wisconsin Association Studying Compulsory Playdates Move

The Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin this week was weighing the next step in its campaign against compulsory playdate allocation following the action last week of the three-judge federal statutory court at Milwaukee in declaring the measure unconstitutional. The decision probably will be appealed.

Enforcement of the law previously had been halted by a temporary injunction which the three-judge court made permanent. The law was passed in 1935, but enforcement was restrained pending a test of the measure's legality.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Production Normal

Mid-January found the wheels of Hollywood's production mill turning over with the speed that is normal for this season of the year. There are 36 productions in various stages of work. Seven new pictures took the boards last week and 11 were turned over to the attention of cutters, film editors and music scoring departments. At least three of the new pictures are potentially of the better-than-average entertainment grade. Three that were finished should attract more than usual attention.

The seven new projects represent seven studios. At Twentieth Century-Fox "Rose of Washington Square," which has and will continue to receive the personal attention of Darryl F. Zanuck, went before the camera. It will feature two newcomers to the ranks of the 10 Money Making Stars, Tyrone Power and Alice Faye. The incomplete supporting cast is of more than ordinary merit, inasmuch as it includes Al Jolson, Marie Wilson, borrowed from Warners, Douglas Fowley, Hobart Cavanaugh, Moroni Olsen and E. E. Clive.

"Beau Geste" Starts

With work proceeding in the studio and on location at Yuma, Arizona, Paramount started "Beau Geste." The principals are Gary Cooper, Ray Milland, Robert Preston, J. Carroll Naish, Brian Donlevy and a newcomer, Susan Hayward.

The third potentially big picture, "East Side of Heaven," was given the starting signal at Universal. It will feature Bing Crosby, Joan Blondell and Mischa Auer. It is of interest to note that this is the first time Crosby has appeared in a Universal picture since, as a member of the Rhythm Boys, he was seen with Paul Whiteman in "King of Jazz."

Republic's contribution to the new work is "Rough Rider Patrol," an outdoor action story in which will be seen Roy Rogers, Mary Hart, Raymond Hatton, Eddie Acuff, George Meeker and William Pawley.

Columbia began a melodrama, "Outside These Walls." It will feature Dolores Costello, Michael Whalen, Virginia Weidler and Charles Halton.

With Pat O'Brien, John Payne, Ann Sheridan and Gale Page as principals, Warners started "Roaring Road," a romance told against the background of auto racing.

A detective melodrama, "The Mystery of Mr. Wong," was started at Monogram. Boris Karloff is the star and Craig Reynolds, Grant Withers, Dorothy Tree and Morgan Wallace are the supporting principals.

Paramount Finishes Four

A big clearance was made on the shooting schedule at Paramount, where four pictures came off the active line. A race track story, "The Lady's from Kentucky," will feature George Raft and Ellen Drew in a hectic romance, while comedy will be contributed by Hugh Herbert and Zasu Pitts. Bob Burns is the star of "I'm from Missouri," a comedy with Gladys George, Judith Barrett, William Henry, E. E. Clive, Doris Lloyd, Barry Mackay, Patricia Morison, Lawrence Grossmith, Melville Cooper, Dennie Moore, Tom Dugan, Spencer Charters and James Burke. Claudette Colbert and Don Ameche head the cast in "Midnight," a sprighty comedy which also will present Francis Lederer, John Barrymore, Mary Astor, Elaine Barrie, Hedda Hopper and Lionel Pape. "Grand Jury Secrets," a topical melodrama, will feature John Howard, Gail Patrick, William Frawley and Jane Darwell, with John Hartley, Harvey Stephens, Morgan Conway, Frank Conroy, Elisha Cook, Jr., and Kitty Kelly.

Filming the driving of the golden spike which joined the Union Pacific transcontinental right-of-way, a location shot for the Paramount-DeMille epic, "Union Pacific", which was made the occasion of considerable rejoicing publicity-wise.

Two pictures were completed at Warners. Pat O'Brien, Wayne Morris, Joan Blondell, May Robson, Sidney Toler, Maxie Rosenbloom, Jane Wyman, Stanley Fields, Ed Brophy, Morgan Conway, Olin Howland and Ward Bond will be seen in "Broadway Cavalier." The comedy, "Sweepstakes Winner," will feature Marie Wilson and Johnnie Davis, along with Allen Jenkins, Maxie Rosenbloom, Charlie Foy, Billy Wayne and Bert Hanlon.

"The Lone Ranger Rides Again" was finished at Republic. Bob Livingston is starred, with Jinx Falkenberg, Chief Thundercloud, Duncan Renaldo, William Gould, Rex Lease, Eddie Dean, Bob McClung, Glenn Strange and Stanley Blystone among the support. The Gleason family, James, Lucille and Russell, with Mary Hart, head the cast of the tentatively titled "Higgins Family No. 2." Harry Davenport, Henry Arthur, Maude Eburne, Purnell Pratt and Marjorie Gateson are in the support.

MGM checked two films off its shooting list. "The Dusty Road," formerly titled "Song of the West," will present Nelson Eddy and Virginia Bruce, with Lionel Barrymore, Victor McLaglen, Edward Arnold, H. B. Warner and Charles Butterworth. In "Fast and Loose," a romantic comedy, will be seen Robert Montgomery, Rosalind Russell, Reginald Owen, Ralph Morgan, Etienne Girardot, Alan Dinehart, Jo Ann Sayers, Joan Marsh, Anthony Allen, Tom Collins, Sidney Blackmer, Mary Forbes and Donald Douglas.

Columbia finished "Romance of the Redwoods." Charles Bickford, Jean Parker, Gordon Oliver, Marc Lawrence, Lloyd Hughes, John Tyrrell and Erville Alderson are the principals.

Musical Cavalcade

Spurred by the box office success of "Alexander's Ragtime Band," Darryl F. Zanuck, Twentieth Century-Fox production chief, put another calvacade of American music into work this week when "Rose of Washington Square" began under Roy De Ruth's direction.

Twenty-six songs, dating from the World War period to the present day, will be included in the picture, which will feature Tyrone Power, Alice Faye and Al Jolson.

Celebration

The date was January 17th but the occasion was more like a concentrated Fourth of July celebration when Cecil B. DeMille invited the press out to location to see the reenactment of that driving of the golden spike that completed the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad. For a man who, according to newspaper reports, is going about his work on a stretcher, Mr. DeMille is the most active invalid we ever saw.

He put on his usual good show. Perched high on the end of a camera crane, 25 feet above the multitude, Mr. DeMille yelled orders and wisecracked for an hour and a half.

Gunga Din

(RKO-Radio)

Epic Episode of Empire

For 135 minutes that seem no longer than the customary 90, George Stevens' mammoth production of Rudyard Kipling's "Gunga Din" held its world premiere audience at the Pantages theatre in Hollywood taut as a regimental drumhead while Sergeants Cary Grant, Victor McLaglen and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., fought, screamed and slugged black India into submission to Queen Victoria.

The film is fast, furious and fascinating, a blunt, hard statement of the imperial policy that was and may yet be England's, a powerful account of masculine adventure under arms with never the pulling of a punch or the forcing of a point to discount the smashing, shattering climax. "Gunga Din" is a picture an audience can sink its teeth in.

The story, based on the Kipling poem, is by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur, who prove again that they can really write a story when they buckle into the job, and the screen play by Joel Sayre and Fred Guiol is straight, strong and free as a marching song. George Stevens' direction has the solid force and steady velocity of an artist who knows he has a story to tell and how to tell it. There is no sitting around in barracks swapping flip dialogue, no subtle intimations and no absurd comedy relief in this picture. The three swashbuckling soldiers who carry the customer's interest are in there punching every step of the way.

The Messrs. Grant, McLaglen and Fairbanks are as evenly starred and as evenly matched as any three actors ever were. They play three brawling, battling buddies who are too busy attending to Mother England's Colonial policy of civilization via Krag to spend much time on off-duty foolishness. At one point there is mild merriment around a punch bowl. Through the whole action runs a thread of lusty humor having to do with the objections of two of the soldiers to the third soldier's matrimonial aspirations. It is rugged, clean humor, however, in contrast to the variety generally dispensed in pictures of the kind, and it takes up little screen time. So with the romantic angle, a very slight one in which Joan Fontaine appears briefly and unimportantly as pertains to the story proper.

If the film may be likened, generically, to any other of known record, that other would be "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." Like that one, this picture places its principal characters at the mercy of fanatic natives who apply torture to force revelation of military information. As in that one, this portion of "Gunga Din," although footnoted on the film as authentic, approaches the fantastic as viewed by 1939 eyes, but it is to be remembered that the persons who buy the tickets didn't do much staying away from "Bengal Lancer" on that account.

The title role is played in notable undertone by Sam Jaffe, and producer Stevens achieves a terrific final effect by allowing "Din" to enter the picture completely unidentified and progress inconspicuously to his ultimate proportions. The deed of heroism imputed to him in Kipling's imperishable lines is performed with tragic simplicity and registers the harder for it.

The picture opens smoothly and introduces its three stars abruptly in a slugging match with fellow soldiers. A few minutes later they are surrounded with a small detail in a desolated village and fight their way out in a battle that would carry any ordinary Grade A production handsomely. It is a curtain-raiser here. The battle scenes in which the picture reaches its peak, magnificently photographed as staged on a mountainous terrain with thousands of infantry, artillery and cavalry engaged in sweeping camera range, have never been equalled.

The plot, in simple, centers about the operations of a native murder cult and the British Army's ways and means of coping with it. The three comrades locate the hideout of the chief but are captured, tortured and held as bait to draw the regimental column into ambush. It is the dying "Gunga Din" whose warning bugle call notifies the approaching regiment of its peril in time to deploy under attack and then counter-attack victoriously.

The picture is utterly clean in every particular and suitable for extended exhibition in any theatre, any place, any time.

Previewed as above noted to a response that must have been as sweet music to the studio executives present who are said to have spent $1,500,000 to hear it.—WILLIAM R. WEAVER.

Idiot's Delight

(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Romantic Melodrama

Any analysis of the poignantly expanded pictorial adaptation of Robert E. Sherwood's Pulitzer Prize play establishes it as one of the most engaging adult entertainment features to have reached the screen in years.

Remodeling of the play to meet screen standards presented a major problem. There were international complications to consider. There was the delicate matter of so treating the intimate personal relationship incidental to the plot that its presentation on the screen would be in accordance with accepted moral requirements.

To the credit of producer Hunt Stromberg, director Clarence E. Brown and Mr. Sherwood himself, who wrote the screen play, it can be said that the job was done sensibly, intelligently, and in such a way that likelihood of censorial objection has been reduced to a minimum.

All the talk of "Idiot's Delight" has endowed it with a uniquely topical and timely significance. That is one showmanship factor. A fearful world is arming with a frenzy never known before. The love story told in the picture culminates with the dreaded outbreak of a war. Thus a further topical quality is attached to the picture and there are many additional commercial assets which the picture makes available to exhibitors.

By his work Clark Gable gives graphic evidence of why MOTION PICTURE HERALD subscribers have continued him a leading box office personality for seven years. Yet never before have audiences seen such an able and likeable Gable as here. High as his stock has been, "Idiot's Delight" boosts it several notches.

Norma Shearer has the type of role she likes to play, and plays it to the hilt. Together, Gable and Miss Shearer, in an intimate love story, constitute a team of names strong enough to bring the customers stampeding in. While they dominate the show, Edward Arnold, Charles Coburn, Joseph Schildkraut, Peter Wiles, Laura Hope Crews and Skeets Gallagher make notable contributions.

Upon the shoulders of Burgess Meredith, playing the role of a fervid apostle of peace and sanity, was placed the burden of mouthing the vicious indictment of martial madness and war. His speeches are masterpieces, readily adapted to exploitation copy.

As an approach to the melodramatic substance of "Idiot's Delight" Mr. Sherwood wrote a series of sequences which identify the leading characters. These are highly comic, as "Harry Van" is in turn chorusman, ham vaudevillian, pitchman and assistant to the gin-soaked mind reader, "Madame Zuleika."

Trapeze artist "Irene" breaks up the act, begins an association with "Harry" that culminates in a casual love affair in an Omaha hotel. Their paths part. Years elapse. The scene shifts to a hotel just across the Swiss border. "Harry" has been touring Europe with a troupe of show girls. The frontiers are closed. The paths of "Harry" and "Irene" come together again. "Irene" is now a phoney countess, exotic consort of munitions manufacturer "Weber," who, it is made known, is largely responsible for the war that is about to engulf Europe. "Harry" is sure she is the "Irene" of Omaha. He plays with her in cat and mouse fashion. With womanly wile she lures him on and staves him off.

Always the menace of war hangs over all in the hotel. The crash comes. Planes from an adjacent airport bomb a great capital. Opportunity to escapes the avenging carnage is offered all except "Irene," whom "Weber" deserts. "Harry," scorning escape, comes back to be with "Irene," who now admits that she was the girl in Omaha. As bursting bombs create havoc, "Harry" and "Irene," miraculously safe in each other's arms, realize in a fierce flame of love that they are the only sane persons in a world run by idiots.

It is up to showmen who understand their patrons' preferences to make the decision as to how to sell "Idiot's Delight" to the best advantage. Primarily it is an adult attraction. It can be exploited as an indictment of war and war madness. Conversely it can be offered as a document upholding the cause of peace and sanity. The public may be told that it is an intimate story. Whatever angle may be chosen, the real exploitation meat nonetheless is in the stars, Norma Shearer and Clark Gable.

Previewed at the Village theatre, Westwood, Cal. A notable host was in attendance. The consensus appeared to be that "Idiot's Delight," although a specialized attraction, will be a box office mop-up.—GUS MCCARTHY.

Persons in Hiding

(Paramount)

J. Edgar Hoover Crimefilm

If the people of the nation are agreed on any one thing it is that J. Edgar Hoover has done a good job as head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and that the nation is better off for it. This picture is from his book of the same title. It is clearly the exhibitor's business to shout that fact from his marquee.

There is much about the picture to suggest the authenticity of its contents and their origin. Save for the key character, a singularly sinister young woman played with great effectiveness by Patricia Morison, the persons in the picture, on both sides of the law, are impressively realistic. Neither the criminals nor their ultimate captors are represented as supermen, but the methods and processes by which they operate have the ring of genuineness. The film surpasses many more elaborately cast and produced works in kind by showing not only that crime doesn't pay but also, and graphically, the reasons why.

Edward T. Lowe produced the picture with an eye to realism rather than opulence and Louis King directed it in the straightaway manner of a well written news story. William R. Lipman and Horace McCoy wrote the screen play. It deals primarily with the monetary aspirations of a young woman embittered by childhood poverty and with her attempt to realize them through management of a gunman and, later, a gang. The F.B.I. men come into the picture at the point where the young woman's depredation cross over into the zone of their jurisdiction and end with her capture. Bank robbery, hijacking, assorted burglaries and finally kidnapping, the incident dealt with in greatest detail, figure in the story.

Miss Morison's portrayal of the avaricious young woman, by no means an easy assignment, is striking in every particular. Lynn Overman plays the principal F.B.I. man in his best form. J. Carrol Naish turns in his usual performance as the gunman and the others in the cast play up to these.

The most interesting sequences are those in which the kidnaping case is taken up by the government men after ransom has been paid and the hostage has returned home, an episode closely paralleling a factual incident of public record. This is, in itself, any customer's money's worth.

Fisherman's Wharf

(RKO-Principal)

Father and Son Story

Charming is the word for "Fisherman's Wharf," an idyll of the life of the little exploited yet famed Fisherman's Wharf of San Francisco. This Sol Lesser production, starring Bobby Breen, tells a poignant story of a waif whose affection for his foster father wins out over the animosity of scheming relatives. The picture, simple and gripping, has novel background, substantial characterizations, an excellent musical score and appeal to all, regardless of age or sex. Master Breen is given an opportunity to act as well as sing.

The sixth Bobby Breen vehicle to be produced by Lesser for RKO release, "Fisherman's Wharf" has no outstanding song, but of the three numbers for the youngster, "Songs of Italy," a medley of well known Neapolitan folk songs arranged by Frank Churchill and Paul Webster, is most enchanting. The other two are "Sell Your Cares for a Song," by Victor Young and Charles Newman, and "Fisherman's Chantey," by Farlan Myers and William Howe. Young did the musical direction, with vocal arrangements by Max Terr and musical supervision by Abe Meyer.

Chief among the supporting cast are Leo Carrillo and Henry Armetta, two of Hollywood's most astute comedians. Carrillo, as the foster father and Armetta as his close friend are not held in too close check and deliver impressively. Others in the cast are Rosina Galli, standout in her role as housekeeper; Lee Patrick, as a scheming aunt; Tommy Bupp, in the role of a spoiled cousin; Leon Belasco, George Humber, and Slicker, trained seal.

Sharing in credits of a well rounded production are Bernard Vorhaus, director, and Bernard Schubert, Ian Hunter and H. Clyde Lewis, writers of the screenplay.

All is well in the "Roma" household, shared by "Tony" and "Carlo," until "Aunt Stella" and her son, "Rudolph," arrive. "Tony" is told that he is an orphan and starts to run away. "Carlo," his foster father, explains to him the full meaning of his adoption, and the boy returns.

Previewed in the Ambassador Theatre, Los Angeles, before the press and an invited audience who, well filled with seafood brought by plane from Fisherman's Wharf for the occasion, bestirred themselves to applaud enthusiastically.

St. Louis Blues

(Paramount)

A Variety Show

There aren't any cowboys and Indians in "St. Louis Blues." Other than including the number, in varied vocal and orchestral arrangements a few times, the story has nothing to do with W. C. Handy's blues composition. It's a showboat yarn and it might be classified as a musical romance, but, whether it's a little or a lot, the film contains something of almost every kind of amusement idea that has strictly mass appeal.

Sometimes the material doesn't exactly mortise. Things that might have been left out have been left in. Things that might be more smooth are rough and frayed about the edges. Consequently there are inconsistencies. Yet the music fits perfectly and, after a fashion, so do love interest, comedy, melodrama, action and spectacle.

The story has to do with a beautiful girl fleeing from a cruel persecutor, a noble hero and an "I've-got-the-papers-gimme-the-girl" villain. All happens aboard or about a Mississippi River showboat, which makes for picturesque backgrounds and much diversified amusement.

For instance, Dorothy Lamour sings solo with Matty Malneck's band and the Kings Men, but both outfits also have moments to themselves. Dorothy is gowned in house dresses, traveling costumes, evening frocks and in her sarong. Dark-skinned Maxine Sullivan sings too; alone, with the Hall Johnson Choir and with the ensemble. For variety she does her swing number, "Loch Lomond," and, of course, "St. Louis Blues." Even Lloyd Nolan makes a try at singing. Mary (Punkins) Parker does a veil dance. Then she marries Tito Guizar, and the pair dodge in and out of the picture like a between-the-acts specialty. Cliff Nazarro is funny with his double talk and mimickings of a tobacco auctioneer. Comic also is Jessie Ralph, a cigar-smoking old Amazon of the river and show business with a heart of gold, who figures out the way to sidetrack the dastardly villain (who really got hissed), Jerome Cowan.

"St. Louis Blues" probably never will win any mention as a picture of the day, week, month or year, nor will any of the artists have any medals pinned on them for the merit of their performances. But Miss Lamour has a role that is pretty much up her alley and Lloyd Nolan in his second successive sympathetic role does a good job. Such old reliables as Jessie Ralph, Jerome Cowan, William Frawley and Victor Kilian check in with capable performances.

With the surprising amount of varied entertainment, there is considerable exploitation material.

Previewed in the Paramount theatre, Los Angeles. The common herd up in the far stretches of the back gallery literally ate up the show, which didn't tax their imaginations too heavily. Sounds rising from the main floor indicated that the affluent folk down there were also deriving considerable enjoyment. Beauty for the Asking

Yes and No as to Cosmetics

Dealt with in gingerly fashion is the recently agitated question as to whether cosmetics and beauty parlors are legitimate business enterprises or rackets. Books alleging fakery have had wide circulation, and advertising layouts designed to offset their influence have run to fancy figures as well as design. At latest report the beautification plants still were doing a thriving business and the books still were selling well. Inventive showmen may be able to derive from this background various devices for getting persons in to see a picture presenting, interchangeably, alternately and inconclusively, both sides of the question.

Five writers are credited with the story used by producer B. P. Fineman and director Glenn Tryon to set the matter before the customers. Whether or not they may have been of a mind as to where the truth lies, the picture leaves it on the 50-yard line at fadeout time after pushing it back and forth between the 20-yard stripes during the 65 minutes of play. They have been successful in keeping the story itself from gaining headway enough to take the customer's attention away from the background.

The plot pertains to a young man who jilts a beauty operator to marry a millionairess and the jilted one's discovery, after making a fortune out of a face cream backed by the millionairess' money, that she really didn't love the fellow anyway and does love the advertising man who helped her get the backing. Money, emotions and motives get somewhat tangled meanwhile, but the actors keep their lines straight.

Attitude of the authors and others toward the background issue is two-ply. Dialogue repeatedly mentions the long profits to be realized from the sale of cosmetics and sets up as a fixed rule that women evaluate the virtues of beauty ministrations by the prices they pay for them. Again, dialogue and action maintain that the sort of feminine loveliness acquired in beauty shops is essential to success in romance. Action, the while, shows that facial and bodily treatments make a woman more desirable in men's eyes than Nature did. Under this arrangement, it would seem, any woman in the audience is at liberty to select whatever answer to the question pleases her and walk out with it.

The place is a city, probably New York, and the time could be now. The acting is perfunctory.

Previewed at the Alexander theatre, Glendale, Cal., where it was quietly received.—William R. Weaver.

They Drive by Night

(First National)

Murder Melodrama

On first sight this might be dismissed as an effective murder mystery. It has, however, additional appeal in its exploitation of a neglected but distinctively English background, the trunk roads of Britain and the commercial lorry drivers who take their heavy cargoes across the country at night. This canvas of rain and wind-swept highways, of dingy snack bars and hard-boiled Cockney artisans, is both fascinating and convincing: the low life element has seldom if ever been handled with more naturalness and sympathy, whether by directoral treatment or individual portrayal.

Produced by Jerome Jackson's organization, with sound technical qualities, the picture tells of a Welsh "ne'er-do-well," who leaves gaol to become suspect immediately of murder, traces his flight by the Great North Road and its lorries, and etches his plight and his bid to clear himself by finding the real murderer. The major portion of the story fixes on the element of flight and pursuit, handles it excitingly and with varied incident. Later the film develops into a more concentrated game of hunt the murderer, a clinically minded pervert posing as a student of criminal psychology. It may be "hokum" in the accepted sense, but it should easily stand up to the best average of its kind.

Emlyn Williams, Welsh actor-dramatist, effectively handles the role of "Shorty" Matthews, the innocent victim of circumstances. Anna Konstam, in a brand of low life characterization with which it would be easy to go wrong, foreshadows the dawn of a new star. Ernest Thesiger in an insinuating, oily role as the criminal, Allan Jeayes as a burly lorry driver, Julie Barrie as a dance hall hostess, are but three of an unusually natural cast.

On the English field, films like this, with their frank melodrama, their technical completeness and not least their deliberately English flavor, have infinitely more chance than many more expensive efforts.

Shown to an all trade audience at the Cambridge theatre, the film gripped throughout and, though a few criticisms of occasional slowness were forthcoming the British exhibitors seemed to consider it marketable in a modest way.—Aubrey Flanagan.

The Lone Wolf Spy Hunt

(Columbia)

Comedy-Melodrama

Columbia has worked a lot of entertainment into "The Lone Wolf Spy Hunt." Also there is quite a bit of material for effective showmanship in the story and production. Basically, as the title denotes, the piece is a melodrama, yet there is an unusual amount of comedy and the love interest has a fresh aspect.

It will be remembered that the Lone Wolf, "Michael Lanyard," is a safe-cracking specialist. In this case, with his daughter "Patricia" growing up, and having more than a platonic fondness for "Val Carson," he has set himself up in business in Washington. While the early comedy has to do with "Michael" trying to talk "Patricia" out of being a detective, the picture quickly takes up its melodrama. International spies are unable to steal desired secret military plans. Knowing "Michael's" safe-cracking ability, "Spiro" has his henchmen kidnap him. Aided by his daughter and "Val," "Michael" escapes. From this point on the picture takes on an exciting cops-and-robbers turn. Between brushes with the police, directed by "Inspector Thomas" and "Sergeant Devan," the hero has much difficulty in picking up the trail of "Spiro's" gang, who finally have stolen the plans. After wild excitement in which "Patricia" proves herself an aide-de-camp and "Val" has much to do, "Michael" recovers the plans and adds new luster to his reputation as a detective.

While there's plenty of appeal for adults, the fact that Miss Weidler has been given so much to do makes it a matter of more than ordinary interest to youngsters.

Off the Record

(Warner)

Melodrama

The entertainment value of "Off the Record" hardly justifies an extensive exploitation campaign. Mention of the fact that Pat O'Brien, Joan Blondell, Bobby Jordan, a "Dead End" kid, and Alan Baxter are the principals should prove sufficient showmanship in most instances.

"Off the Record" is a combination newspaper and underworld story. Most of the early sequences are given over to ranting squabbles between "Breezy Elliott," editor, and "Jane Morgan," reporter, who, nonetheless, are in love with each other. Eventually "Jane" prints an obscure little notice about slot machine racketeers which sends "Joe" and "Mickey Fallon" to jail. "Jane," sorry for her innocent victim, "Mickey," hoodwinks "Breezy" into marrying her so that she can become the youngster's guardian. "Breezy" doesn't like the boy but gets him a candid camera reporting job. Then all components of the piece become complicated. "Joe" escapes jail to be killed after he has slain big shot "Baronette"; "Mickey" apparently is involved in a jewel robbery, but he does get an exclusive pictorial story of the dual killing, which causes "Breezy" to believe that he has been pretty good after all.

March of Time (No. 6, Vol. 5)

(RKO Radio)

"The State of the Nation: 1939"

Concomitant with the emphasis on the theme of Americanism, notably in the case of Warner Brothers, the documentary-minded "March of Time" views the U. S. scene in this release.

The composite picture, as the cameras record it, is that the state of the nation is good. Politically the film points to accredited surveys, showing President Roosevelt still holding to his popularity. The film points out that after nine years of depression there are still some 10,000,000 unemployed in this country and then puts its lenses on more hopeful signs: the rise in national income, increase in bank deposits, the upturn in steel and automobile production, soaring carloadings, and the promise of a real housing boom.

The arguments and facts are presented in the forceful and effective manner consonant with its producers' handling of issues. The informal studies cover New Dealers, Republicans, labor leaders, crusaders, administrators, reporters and Mr. Average Man, and close on the note that the average American family enjoys a higher standard of living than the peoples of other lands. Running time, 17 minutes.

The Eternal Fire

(United Artists)

Splendid

A newcomer and a worthy and welcome addition to the screen travelogue groups is this introductory number from the picture pages of the Count and Countess Keller's journeys. Intelligently shot and aided by superlative supplementary assistance of exquisite and sensitively applied color and an effective musical background, the inspection of Vesuvius' "eternal fire" makes for moving and absorbing screen watching. The camera has caught the spell and fury of the fiery furnace and with the aid of natural color the sight of the flowing river of lava becomes an intriguing and terrifying scene to watch. Besides the active action of the volcano, scenes are shown of the ancient city of Pompeii to testify to the historic wrath of the volcano. Unearthed, the famed city of the past is inspected with scholarly insight. The ruined glories in the instances of statuary, buildings and amphitheatre become glowingly alive under the expert manipulation of camera and color. An ironic note is appended by the removal of the camera from the scene of destruction and desolation to a gay Neapolitan countryside where the people do their native dancing in the shadow of Vesuvius's smoking cone.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Men of Steel

(MGM)

Labor Panacea

The fabricators of the plot present the case of Capital versus Labor in the instance of the employees of Hoamy Foamy Washing Machine Company reaching a dovelike settlement with the executives of the organizations when the bigwigs of the corporation realize that the workers' show is not only excellent advertising publicity for the company's product but also valuable balm for soothing the wounds of labor trouble. Of course, the song and dance romance between the boss's beautiful daughter and the head songbird of the factory has a lot to do with cementing the strained feelings.—Running time, 21 minutes.

The Human Bomb

(Vitaphone)

Terrific

The latest installment from the Floyd Gibbons volume of "Your True Adventures" ranks high in the column of excitement and suspense. The yarn concerns a lunatic who terrorizes a police station with a package of dynamite. When he is finally overpowered through a ruse of an exploding cameraman's bulb the onlooker will be apt to lean back relieved but spent with excitement. Oddly enough, the lunatic is dragged off to prison instead of to an insane asylum.—Running time, 12 minutes.

Paramount Pictorial (No. 6)

(Paramount)

Good

Three items widespread enough to have a general appeal give this newest number from the Pictorial section good grained entertainment. A trip to Nairobi, capital of Britain's African Kenya colony, is handled skillfully. The financial upkeep of a race horse is estimated by an inspection of the many ingenious devices invented to insure the thoroughbred's welfare. Finally there is a visit to a broadcasting station, which sponsors the Milkman's Matinee, an odd radio program for night workers and owls. —Running time, 10 minutes.

Nautical Knights

(Universal)

Musical Comedy

Arthur and Morton Havel, vaudeville headliners, are the masters of ceremonies and introduce Moore and Revel, famed dancing team; Stump and Stumpy, tap dancers; Judy Starr, currently appearing with Hal Kemp and his orchestra, and the Ghezzis, balancing team, who have toured the United States and Europe with their act. It is an entertaining musical.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Double Diving

(MGM)

Sport Subject

Here is demonstrated in amazing fashion what two professional divers can accomplish in double diving. The divers are Dutch Smith, an American, and Farid Sumaika, an Egyptian, alike as two peas in a pod. The almost perfect synchronization of their movements makes their most difficult dives seem simple and easy. Pete Smith provides the comedy touch. A sequence in which a none too sober gentleman dives into a pool that has been drained and winds up in a coal mine is decidedly humorous.—Running time, eight minutes.

Unusual Occupations, No. 4

(Paramount)

Interesting

Of the six strange ways to make a living depicted in this number, two are practiced by screen personalities. Lucien Littlefield, character actor, is seen developing some startling methods of screen makeup. The cowboy star, Buck Jones, will disillusion some of his fans by exhibiting his mechanical proficiency in building and collecting horseless carriages. The other jobs reported concern a London newsboy who delivers the London Times to his only customer, the King of England; a woman who fashions beautiful floral decorations from feathers; a string collector and a drum major who instructs those comely girls at the head of a parade.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Ski Girl

Just in Time

While there is nothing new in this latest demonstration on the technique of slaloming, as the young woman climbs to a high perch and then proceeds to retrace her path, the photography is so outstanding and the angles at which the girl skier is caught in her whirlwind descent so striking that the material becomes exciting.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Stranger Than Fiction (No. 58)

(Universal)

Good

This interesting short subject brings forward the marble champion of Battle Ground Academy in Tennesse. He is Headmaster George Briggs, who defeats the student champion of the school. Other subjects cover many fields. Dirtless farming made possible by a new water culture, produces fruits and vegetables without large tracts of land. One of the first submarines to be successfully used in warfare is on display at the Confederate Soldiers Home in New Orleans. Flowers and decorations are made from fish bones by an enterprising woman in England. A self-loading truck invented by Dr. J. E. Owens, historical costumed dolls used in teaching school children and bells from one of the largest collections known also make this short enjoyable.—Running time, 9½ minutes.

Brulatour Recovering From Gunshot Wound

Jules Ernest Brulatour, distributor of motion picture film and husband of Hope Hampton, was recovering this weekend at Lenox Hill Hospital, New York, from a gunshot wound, which he told the police was inflicted accidentally last Sunday evening at his Park Avenue apartment while he was inspecting a revolver. Dr. Herman Fischer removed the bullet, reporting that his condition was not serious.

PATENT PROBE TURNS TO TELEVISION AND SOUND

Farnsworth Says Television Will Arrive This Year; 50,000-Hour Tube Reported Held

The Administration's Temporary National Economic Committee, which for weeks has been conducting investigations in Washington into "monopolies" in general business, veered abruptly this week from the interrogation of leaders in automobiles, glass, farming machinery and other commodities, and the patent situations existing therein, to patents in television, radio and the sound field. Capital observers have long expected that patents in these fields would eventually be looked into by the TNEC.

Farnsworth Testifies

Summoning Philo T. Farnsworth, of Farnsworth Television, Inc., and Frank B. Jewett, president of Bell Telephone Laboratories, scene of many of the Telephone Company's communications and sound motion picture inventions, to explain the situations existing in their respective lines, the Committee heard first from Mr. Farnsworth, that the coming 12 months will see television brought from "around the corner" and permanently established as an entertainment feature; and, then from Mr. Jewett, that a 50,000-hour tube is purposely being held back by radio manufacturers because it would cut the output if marketed.

Referring to the plans of several companies to have television transmitters in operation by next spring, Mr. Farnsworth said that his concern is not only ready to begin transmissions but plans within a year to ask the Federal Communications Commission for a commercial license which will permit the station to accept advertising.

Sets for $125

Coincident with the opening of transmitting stations, he told the committee, receiving sets will be made available to the public at prices probably starting as low as $125. His company plans to go into production and is acquiring a large factory building in Ohio for that purpose.

His attention called by Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney of Wyoming to reports that television had been suppressed, Mr. Farnsworth explained that the delay in its introduction was due, not to efforts of any individual, organization or group to gain control but to the realization that the introduction of television will "freeze" the art and the natural desire not to bring it out before it was properly organized.

Sets To Be Standardized

Such discussion of patents as took place during Mr. Farnsworth's appearance centered around the question of receiving set production. The sets which will be offered the public, he said, will be so standardized that they will be capable of receiving any of several types of transmissions. Incidentally, he added, broadcasting equipment has been so far perfected that both studio and outdoor scenes can be transmitted with fidelity equal to that of motion pictures.

To produce a television receiving set, he explained, it is necessary to use the patents of three companies, each of which have ownership of basic patents. But no difficulty has been encountered in securing the necessary licenses, nor has any effort been made either to control the industry or fix prices. His own concern with his patents, he said, is merely to collect royalties.

Led into a deeper discussion of the patent situation, Mr. Farnsworth expressed the belief that without the protection now granted there would be little hope of starting enterprises of such ambitious character as television. "It takes too much money, and you must have some protection," he said. He also decried proposals for the compulsory licensing of patents to all comers, declaring it would so decrease the value of patents that inventors might as well not take them out.

Prior to Mr. Farnsworth's appearance on the stand, Mr. Jewett, of the Bell Laboratories, disclosed that it was his organization that had developed a vacuum tube with a life of 50,000 hours, or 50 times as long as the life of the tubes now used, which several companies had taken out licenses for but had never manufactured, explaining that it would cut the tube business.

Asked for his reaction, Mr. Farnsworth said his company had a license to manufacture the tube but he could not see any public demand for it, because the radio sets in which it was used would become obsolete long before the tube wore out.

CBS TELEVISION ALSO SET IN APRIL

With the announcement already made that National Broadcasting will have a regular television broadcast schedule in April, Dr. Peter Goldmark, television engineer for Columbia Broadcasting, announced this week that the transmitter which CBS has in the tower of the Chrysler Building, New York, is expected to be in operation on April 1st. Across the street from the Chrysler Building, in the Grand Central Building, work has been begun on the conversion of a 250-foot room into studios, with the coaxial cable connecting the two already laid and ready for the first tests.

Demonstrations of television will be held in Washington beginning Friday, for five days. The National Broadcasting transmitting stations will be mobile units, installed at the National Press Club, more than a half-mile away from the receivers.

RKO has concluded arrangements with the National Broadcasting for the televising of a motion picture, with a television version of "Gunga Din" to be condensed to 1,000 feet, with sound and sub-titles filling in missing action sequences.

FCC Says Radio Not Ready for "Super Power"

Holding that the broadcasting industry is not ready for "super-power," a Federal Communications Commission committee which has been making a study of proposed new rules and standards for broadcast stations, this week recommended that no change be made in the present limitation of 50,000 watts power.

ASIDES and INTERLUDES

We have our two-for-one admissions, dish giveaways, Bank Nights and chance games, free grocery baskets, free soup spoons and double, even triple bills. Below the Rio Grande, at Rosario, second largest city in Argentina, the owner of the Cine Rex and Cine Palace Echesortu is giving free tickets, good for the entire season, to any and all women of the city requesting them. They claim "this is the only way to stimulate business."

The week's battling of radio advertisers and their program talent over the actors' demands for higher pay was interrupted for just a second when theatrical press reports arrived in New York from London, with word that the Government-controlled British Broadcasting Company had reduced fees paid players in a new economy move. David Selznick refused to discuss the idea, but H. I. Phillips, New York Sun, understands, jocularly, that the original "Gone with the Wind" story will be entirely rewritten, if not forgotten, and that it will be advertised as the first All English Play About Dixie, featuring "a positively new idea of a Southern accent," with Virginia Leigh, of London, playing Scarlett O'Hara, as announced last week, and Charles Laughton playing Rhett Butler in his bare feet, wearing a straw hat and carrying a bullwhip and binoculars, this making the part a composite of Captain Bligh and the beachcomber role he is now playing for Paramount in "The Beachcomber."

Mr. Phillips, continuing the all-English theme, would have Noel Coward play General Stonewall Jackson in silk pajamas, and have the scene in Sussex in England at a grouse shoot and then shift to the Indian Durbar. Rhett Butler turns out to be a British remittance man, and Scarlett O'Hara a former lady-in-waiting to Queen Victoria who is dismissed for calling the King "Honey."

It will be possible this spring for a "dub" golfer, playing in company of his peers, to approach the 18th green seven down and five dollars out and still wind up in the money, thanks to the Worthington Ball Company, which announces a new "dice-ball." This ball enables the golfer to battle the blind bogey of "side bets" and their relation to the usual hazard of the course. It bears six numbers, is counted by the one uppermost as it stops. With players driving variously colored balls, several "zesty" arrangements are possible for the speculators, to say nothing of the spectators.

IN THE CUTTING ROOM

The Little Princess

(20th Century-Fox)

Shirley Temple

Out at 20th Century-Fox, where they are boasting that the record proves the company is making a habit of turning out big picture hits, they talk about "The Little Princess" as "a gold mine for showmen," say "it's being given the most sumptuous production support Zanuck ever gave a picture," that it will be in color, will have third-dimensional effects, and will be "packed with soaring drama, inspiring romance, rare comedy, glorious spectacle and pageantry and lilting melodies."

More detached consideration indicates that the picturization of the Frances Hodgson Burnett novel, "The Fantasy," is probably the best story vehicle Shirley has had since "Curly Top." As transcribed to screen play form by Ethel Hill and Walter Ferris, the story is localed in London, during the Boer War. Shirley plays the part of an aristocrat's motherless daughter who has remained lovable and unspoiled in spite of luxury and adulation, disliked only by a jealous school mate and stern teacher. She is plunged into poverty when her father is reported dead and the family fortune vanishes. Turned into a slavey, she eventually finds her dad among the wounded soldiers and is befriended by her beloved Queen Victoria.

Shirley's four-year record as the best box office personality in the business is the picture's best commercial recommendation, but there are other names, too. Richard Greene and Anita Louise, who will share the love story contrast, are well known. So are Ian Hunter, Cesar Romero, Arthur Treacher, Miles Mander, Mary Nash, Beryl Mercer, E. E. Clive and the youngsters Marcia Mae Jones and Sybil Jason. The army of extras runs into thousands to assure mass spectacle.

The music, of which there will be plenty, was composed by Walter Bullock and Samuel Pokrass. The dances were staged by Nicholas Castle and Geneva Sawyer. The beautifully staged ballet, inserted as an afterthought, was supervised by Ernest Belcher. The director, whose catalogue of successes includes "The Mighty Barnum," "Wife, Doctor and Nurse" and "I'll Give A Million," is Walter Lang.

Release date: March 17, 1939.

Star Reporter

(Monogram)

Melodrama

A dependable theatrical theme is being used as the story basis for "Star Reporter." Its merit as motion picture entertainment rests, to a great extent, upon how well it is done.

A perusal of exhibitor opinions in the "What the Picture Did for Me" shows, with the same exceptions as in the case of every other studio, that the pictures produced by E. B. Derr have been satisfactory.

"Star Reporter" is a combination newspaper, political and crime melodrama. It adapts a familiar situation. A newspaper man helps his friend to become district attorney. A murder is committed. It is secretly revealed that the district attorney's wife was once married to the culprit, that the newspaper man is his son. This fact unknown, the publisher, demanding a conviction, breaks with his friend and his love dream is menaced. In the end, everything is righted.

The cast includes Warren Hull, Wallis Clarke, Marsha Hunt, Virginia Howell, Clay Clement, Morgan Wallace, Paul Fix, Joseph Crehan and Eddie Kane.

The original screen play is by John T. Neville, and Howard Bretherton is directing.

Release date: Feb. 22, 1939.

Man of Conquest

(Republic)

Historical Romance

"Man of Conquest" will be the biggest and most expensive production that Republic ever has attempted. It will be supported by the company's most extensive advertising and publicity campaign.

In conformity with the trend, the basic story is an outdoor adventure yarn. Basically, however, it is a historical romance. It is being developed as a biography, love story and saga of empire building, of thrilling episodes in the life of Sam Houston.

It will begin with a description of Houston's services in helping win the battle of New Orleans. From then on it concentrates on Houston and the great friendship and mutual admiration that existed between him and Andrew Jackson. It tells of his disappointing romantic adventure and his happy one, of his fight to help his Indian friends retain their lands, of the cooperation of James Bowie and David Crockett with him to free Texas from Mexican domination, of the Alamo massacre and Houston's revenge as he wipes out Santa Ana's army.

Harold Shumate, creator of the original story idea, is one of Hollywood's most prolific writers. The screen play writers, Wells Root, E. E. Paramore, Jr., and Isabell Fortune, have long and honorable records. On the production side, associate producer Sol C. Siegel has turned out several of Republic's best pictures. Among George Nicholls' directing credits are such pictures as "Portia on Trial" and several that won honors for RKO-Radio.

Richard Dix, who always will be remembered for "Cimarron," will be seen as Sam Houston. Edward Ellis, who created a memorable characterization in "A Man to Remember," will be Andrew Jackson. Gail Patrick will be seen as Houston's wife and the supporting company includes such capable players as George Hayes, C. Henry Gordon, Max Terhune, Victor Jory, Robert Armstrong (Bowie), Robert Barrett (Davey Crockett) and young William Benedict.

Release date: To be determined.

Midnight

(Paramount)

Comedy Romance

It's Paris and midnight, but it's not a dyed-in-the-wool melodrama. "Midnight" will be a rollicking farce comedy.

Here's the dual premise. A comely and personable young American woman says she is married to a man she never has met. That gets her into a mess from which she tries to extricate herself by trying to divorce herself from a man to whom she never was married.

It will star Claudette Colbert, direct from her performance in the somber melodrama, "Zaza." The gentlemen with whom she becomes involved are played by Don Ameche, borrowed from 20th Century-Fox, and Francis Lederer. It will feature John Barrymore, very much in the public eye because of his work in "The Great Man Votes" and as a result of his excursion to New York to reappear on the legitimate stage, his wife Elaine Barrie, who also has been much in public notice, Mary Astor, Hedda Hopper and Lionel Pape.

The producer is Arthur Hornblow, who has been in charge of several of Paramount's most entertaining productions. The director, Mitchell Leisen, is a specialist in handling light frothy material, as attest "The Big Broadcasts," "Artists and Models Abroad," "Hands Across the Table."

Charles Brackett and Billy Wilder wrote the screen play, which is based on a story by Edwin Justus Mayer and Franz Schulz.

Release date: May 12, 1939. (tentative).

Fast and Loose

(MGM)

Comedy Mystery

"Fast and Loose" will be a follow-up story to "Fast Company," and in the series which MGM is contemplating from the Marco Page stories. While there will be a new pair of leads and entirely new support, the picture will, as "Topper Takes a Trip" did, contain several flashbacks to the preceding picture.

There will be the same tense mystery, flanked by fun, humor and romance.

"Fast and Loose" looks to be fast stuff in every direction, with not only baffling mystery, but thrills and suspense, with hilarity and contrasting love story. The mystery mounts from a robbery to a broken romance and to a trio of murders, until even the detective hero is in handcuffs. Of course, the guilty culprit is well hidden until the final flash sequence.

New stars in the picture are Robert Montgomery, last in "Three Loves Has Nancy," and Rosalind Russell, fresh from her triumph in "The Citadel." In support are Reginald Owen, Ralph Morgan, Etienne Girardot, Alan Dinehart, Jo Ann Sayers, Joan Marsh, Anthony Allen, Tom Collins, Sidney Blackmer, Mary Forbes and Donald Douglas.

The original screen play is credited to Harry Kurnitz. Direction was assigned to Edwin L. Marin, whose latest pictures are "Everybody Sing," "Listen Darling" and "A Christmas Carol."

Release date: Feb. 17, 1939.

Profit - Sharing Contracts Between Company and Executives Are Upheld by State Supreme Court Justice

Loew's, Inc., and its theatre and MGM film producing-distributing companies earned $9,924,934 for the fiscal year ended Aug. 31, 1938, equal to $5.65 a share, compared with a net of $14,426,062 and $8.46 a share in 1937.

The company's investment in Gaumont-British is listed as $3,500,199, which is included in $4,704,232 of investments in and advances to allied companies.

Dividends paid on preferred stock continued at $888,693, but common stock dividend payments dropped from $13,445,129 in 1937 to $6,492,051 last year. The consolidated earned surplus account showed a balance of $47,787,157, against $44,354,273 the year before.

Court Upholds Loew Contracts

UNITED ARTISTS STUDYING PRODUCT AFTER REDUCING DISTRIBUTION COSTS

Silverstone Invites Others with Quality Pictures to Join the Company Under the New Distribution Plan Approved

United Artists producers and managing officers returned this week to the normal business of making and merchandising motion pictures after reaching accord on policy, product and procedure, all subjects of internal discussion and adjustment for many months.

Emerging from a week of Hollywood conferences, officially described, and so inscribed on the minutes of the corporation, as the "annual meeting of stockholders," the five owner partners—Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Samuel Goldwyn, Charles Chaplin and Alexander Korda—together with Murray Silverstone, chief managing executive, spoke optimistically of the new setup, which, basically, gives to all producers, whether owner-partners or outsiders, a reduction in distribution rates as box office value of their pictures increases.

Resuming Production

More important from the standpoint of exhibitors, who look more pointedly to a source of product supply, definite assurances were forthcoming for a resumption of production by several of the partners, Edward Small's contract to produce was renewed for another three and one-half years, and Alexander Korda, of London, promised six for the new season.

The stockholders adopted a socalled "revolutionary reward for merit program," known as "the Murray Silverstone Distribution Plan," which gives to all United Artists producers, stockholders and independent producers a reduction in distribution rates as the box office value of their pictures increases. The plan is retroactive to Jan. 1, 1938.

"From all producers and from all stockholders came enthusiastic, unanimous commendation of Murray Silverstone," said the company's announcement.

"We not only wish to lend encouragement to our present producers, but invite others with quality pictures to join our 'family' on the same basis," Mr. Silverstone said. "We have no stepchildren at United Artists."

"We will not bring outsiders into our distribution system, preferring to promote and encourage those of our staff who, by performance, have earned more fitting recognition."

Cites Volume Sales

"There is already assurance," he said, "that the business of the company will surpass any previous period in history. The immediate half year already compares most favorably with the entire 12 months of 1938, in business volume. There will be a decided increase in the number of pictures to be made this year. Douglas Fairbanks will re-enter production here, Charlie Chaplin is preparing 'The Dictator' for early production, and Alexander Korda will join the Hollywood production units after finishing his present pictures in London."

James Roosevelt was elected Samuel Goldwyn's director on the stockholders board, succeeding James Mulvey, resigned. The others, all re-elected, were Mary Pickford, Dennis F. O'Brien representing Mr. Fairbanks, Charles Schwartz representing Mr. Chaplin and Emanuel Silverstone representing Mr. Korda. The executive group voted Edward Small an extension of his contract for three and a half more years.

Mr. Korda sails this Saturday aboard the SS Champlain for London.

Harry Gold, eastern general sales manager, this week in New York, elaborated on Mr. Silverstone's statements. He pointed out that in the current midseason exhibition season, the company has $10,000,000 in finished productions.

This week in Hollywood, Mr. Silverstone said Walter Wanger would make six pictures for the new season at a total budget of six to seven million dollars. Of the possibility that Selznick International will remain with United Artists, Mr. Silverstone said he preferred that Mr. Selznick make his own announcement.

Val Paul, formerly studio manager for Universal Pictures, has been named production manager of Edward Small Productions. Mr. Paul's first assignment is supervision of "The Man in the Iron Mask," which starts in February. "The Duke of West Point" and "King of the Turf" have been completed.

Mr. Small will make six to eight features. Besides those mentioned, there will be "My Son, My Son," "Kit Carson," "The Life of Valentino" and "Pago Pago." Mr. Small has signed Wallace Beery, Tom Brown and Jackie Cooper, and is dickering with Randolph Scott. He has taken over the General Service Studios, owned by Electrical Research Products and formerly leased by Emanuel Cohen's Major Productions.

Mr. Korda will make six pictures, two in Hollywood. At least four of the six will be in Technicolor. The production budget will be $7,250,000. Adoption of the new rating system has enabled Korda, as well as other United Artists producers, to increase their production budgets.

Mr. Korda is completing "Four Feathers" in London, and will follow with "The Thief of Bagdad," his first on the 1939-40 schedule. It will star Sabu and Jon Hall. Next will come a feature based on the military exploits of Colonel Lawrence.

Rudyard Kipling's beloved "Jungle Book," with Sabu as its star, will be made in the early summer, and then Mr. Korda will film "The Conquest of the Air," based on the story of aviation and its advancement throughout the world. Both these will be in color.

Two starring vehicles for Merle Oberon will round out the Korda program.

Morris Helprin, Mr. Korda's publicity representative in the United States, is expected to depart for London soon to confer with his chief, and probably will accompany Mr. Korda to the coast this summer.

Irving Asher, Mr. Korda's associate producer in London Films, at whose Denham studios the Columbia "quota" pictures are being made, is to sail for England this Saturday with Mr. Korda.

Mr. Asher conferred with Columbia officials, and a three year deal, under which the Denham studios will make four pictures yearly for Columbia, awaits approval by Jack Cohn. The pictures are expected to use Hollywood writers and stars, among them Cary Grant. Wesley Ruggles probably will direct one or more of the pictures.

United Artists has received the first of a series of three Spanish language pictures from the C. I. S. A., the Mexican producing organization of Felipe Urcier, and has signed a contract calling for three more to be delivered this year.

Also signed recently was a contract with the Count and Countess Friedrich Keller for a second series of "World Wonders," color shorts.

The two producers have completed arrangements for a crew of 10 technicians and cameramen to accompany them on a trip to India and Ceylon, where most of the new series will be filmed.

Court Upholds Loew Contracts

repay the company about $500,000, with interest, that they had received as bonuses.

In addition to the Thalberg estate, those who will be required to make up the $500,000 repayments to the company are Nicholas M. Schenck, president; J. Robert Rubin, vice president and general counsel; David Bernstein, treasurer; and Louis B. Mayer, head of the motion picture producing division.

Emil K. Ellis appeared as trial counsel for the minority stockholders. Joseph M. Proskauer, ex-judge of the Appellate Division, and J. Alvin Bergh, represented the defendants.

The decision, as requested by Mr. Proskauer for the defendants, exonerated directors of the company and held that most of the allegations of the complaint had not been proved. The profit sharing contracts, which were the chief issue in the action, were approved by successive and competent boards of directors, most of whom were disinterested, and also by the stockholders, the court said.

In a statement on the decision, issued from the New York home office on Broadway, Loew-MGM quoted the court as follows:

"'The evidence is replete with instances of lucrative offers received by these executives in an effort to lure them away from Loew's, Inc., and I am convinced of the sincerity of (Nicholas M.) Schenck's testimony that the only way he kept his unique organization intact was by the payment of generous compensation. That this policy has been successful is indicated not only by the standing of the company and the profits which it has earned over the years, but by the testimony of every single witness, including that of the president of one of its chief competitors (S. R. Kent, Twentieth Century-Fox), who frankly stated that he would like to get this executive group for his own company and that their loss would be disastrous to Loew's, Inc.'"

Regarding President Nicholas M. Schenck, Justice Valente said, continuing MGM's quotation of the court:

"'In the last ten years in which he has been the chief executive it must be conceded that his executive control has been of an exceptional character. So many other large concerns in the business went through reorganization or suffered other losses and passed through crises. Loew's, in the worst period of depression, paid its dividends.'"

"After pointing out that there was no evidence that any accounting practice had been adopted merely in order to increase the profit paid under the profit sharing contracts and that the accounting practices were sound," the statement said, "the court held that four of the executives and the Thalberg Estate should have their accounts with the corporation readjusted as to the items involving the Ohio and Chippewa Theatres in 1934, and the amounts paid to the Thalberg Estate since 1936. The 1934 items, the opinion pointed out, resulted from a failure of the accountants, through legal misunderstanding, to subtract for profit sharing purposes the book loss which resulted from a reorganization of the Ohio and Chippewa Theatre properties. The other item resulted from not treating as a profit sharing loss the amounts paid to the Thalerg Estate in settlement of its claims against the corporation. As to these items, the court pointed out, the company had made a mistake of law."

Moore Marriott, Will Hay, Glennis Lorimer and Graham Moffatt in Gainsborough's "Ask a Policeman," the Marcel Varnel comedy being produced at Islington.

Expansion

Expanding its sphere of activity the Strand Film Company, a leading British organization engaged hitherto mainly in the production of short films of a documentary character, moves in February to new studios at Merton Park. A new building is being erected, containing production offices and cutting rooms. The studios are equipped with Western Electric sound recording.

Strand's production schedule is headed by a series of low-budget second feature films. The first of these, a coal-mining story, will go into production in February. Other subjects include Night-Flying, Scotland Yard, the Fire Brigades and Lloyds. The object of these is to make story films set against backgrounds of British national life, in the same way as the American film projects a picture of the American scene.

With the object of showing Britain to the world, a film survey of the history and present-day developments of Britain is being produced in five reels and will tell the story of the rise of democracy in Britain, and the way in which the living democracy of Britain is meeting the problems of the modern world. Other long subjects shortly going into production include a three-reel Animal Kingdom film on the Evolution of Man, which is being directed by Alexander Shaw and supervised by Julian Huxley. Another three-reel subject deals with the history of British civil aviation, showing the importance of the air routes in maintaining the bonds of Empire.

In the short film field, the last series of three Zoo films will be completed early in the New Year. These are:—"Animals on Guard," showing the camouflage which Nature provides for the protection of animals; "The Time of Your Life," describing the two different kinds of time—clock time and the speed at which creatures live; and "How to Look After Your Pets," giving advice and information on the care of pets, from the commonest to the most rare kinds of animals. Another short film is "Sydney Eastbound," a two-reel film on the organization of the Empire Flying Boat services.

Pathé Finishes Three

Of seven pictures scheduled for production in the Pathé production program for 1938-39, three already have been completed, namely, "Night Alone," "Save a Little Sunshine" and "Almost a Honeymoon." The next to be delivered for trade show is "Dead Men Are Dangerous," a thriller with Robert Newton and Peter Gawthorne, directed by Harold French. Awaiting trade show at the same time is "Me and My Pal," a farce in which two new comedy artists, Dave Willis and Pat Kirkwood, are featured in a story of insurance racketeers. This was directed by Thomas Bentley.

Due on the floor recently is "Laughter in Court, a comedy based upon a West End stage play. The cast has not yet been assigned. The picture will be followed by an adaptation of the Fred Duprez farce, "My Wife's Family," which will be filmed for the second time, and later by Sydney Horler's "Tiger Standish."

Under a reciprocal agreement with Monogram the first Pathé production for release in the States will be "Dangerous Fingers," in which appears James Stephenson, now with Warner Bros. in Hollywood.

The most ambitious production yet assigned to Cockney comedian Max Miller and a precedent inasmuch as it is a costume piece, "The Good Old Days" last week was completed at the Warner-First National studios at Teddington by Roy William Neill, director.

In the film Miller appears as a traveling showman of a period when drama was permitted only in the four London theatres owning the Royal Patent. Much of the comedy revolves around Miller's efforts to add straight drama to the song-and-dance show given by his strolling players in taverns and coffeehouses, a situation which consistently embroils him with the law.

Now on the floor and succeeding the Miller film is "Too Dangerous to Live," a thriller with a London background and dealing with the workings of a gang of jewel thieves headed by a mysterious and unseen leader, who uses the short-wave radio to issue his commands.

The film will show Scotland Yard's battle with the criminal broadcaster, with special attention devoted to the "detector vans" used by the GPO to sleuth out unlicensed radios.

Directing the film is Anthony Hankey. In the cast are Greta Gynt, Anna Konstam, Edward Lexy and others.

Special dialogue has been written for "Jamaica Inn," the Pommer-Laughton production now under way at the Elstree Studios, by novelist J. B. Priestley. The screen play of this adaptation of the Daphne du Maurier novel was written by Sidney Gilliat, who has collaborated on numerous British films such as "Yank at Oxford," "Rome Express," "Seven Sinners" and "The Lady Vanishes."

Production has centered recently on the filming of shipwreck scenes. Hundreds of tons of water were launched again and again over a ship set representing a vessel wrecked off the Cornish coast by Laughton and his smugglers.

An exceptionally strong cast backs up Charles Laughton and includes Leslie Banks, Emlyn Williams, Marie Ney, Edward Greenwood and Wylie Watson. Playing opposite Laughton is Maureen O'Hara, Pommer's Irish discovery.

The story is set in the early nineteenth century.

A Sunday ago Alfred Hitchcock, who is directing the film, standing in Broadcasting House, sacred temple of English radio, was presented by the New York Film Critics with their Annual Award for the best directed film of the year, "The Lady Vanishes."

Home from Egypt

Back at Denham from Egypt, Zoltan Korda has launched into active studio work in continuance of his production "The Four Feathers." Matching shots are being devised for linking up scenes inside and outside the tents of Omdurman.

The East Surreys, now back at Colchester, Essex, have invited "The Four Feathers" unit to a regimental dance in February.

For the Fair

Destined for showing at the New York World Fair will be a production entitled "The Londoners" depicting, in graphic form, the growth and development of the Capital under its municipal wing, is early on the production schedule of the Realist Film Unit.

The film, which will be a 45 minute feature, is said to be one of the most ambitious documentaries of its kind and will portray the growth and dramatic development of the London County Council, stepping off from the time of Dickens, and passing to the present day, showing how a small body of men set out to combat the poverty and squalor which jostled the new era of civilization and prosperity.

Britons Say Act Operates in Reverse; Americans Find Measure Inimical to Production of Quality Pictures

by AUBREY FLANAGAN
in London

As duly expected by close students of the situation and foreshadowed in these columns last week, every branch of the British film industry has launched a vigorous and immediate onslaught on the functioning of the 1938 Films Act. At no time since the Bill was made law has the chorus of criticism and the demand for amendment been so vociferous. Though criticisms vary in substance and in detail the demand for a change in the Act is general, and the conviction that so far it has lamentably failed to do what it was supposed to do is as emphatic as it is united.

Exhibitors Form Committee

Exhibitors already have formed a new committee to examine the workings of the Act with special regard to the shortage of product, to redundancy and to the booking complications following upon mergers, potential or actual, of the caliber of that foreshadowed between Gaumont British and Odeon.

Producers, lacking a representative body, have had a voice, or voices, in the columns of the press, with demands for a separate quota, or an increase in the renters' quota. They are known to be behind the recent demand of the labour Unions for an increase of renters' quota at the end of the first year of the Act.

Not least significantly, for their plight is perhaps the most ironic comment upon Mr. Stanley's Act, American distributors have been compelled to approach the Board of Trade and point out that the Act, contrary to its intentions, and contrary to the declaration of Mr. Stanley, is penalizing the production of quality films, and that its multiple quota provisions are proving a millstone about the neck of producer-distributors.

Say Quality Is Impaired

A few days ago, Mr. Stanley, with his back to the wall of the House of Commons, defending the mathematical insufficiencies of his Act, pleaded in justification that it had improved and stimulated the quality of British films. Producer-distributors here, who have availed themselves of the multiple quota clauses of the Act, have told Mr. Stanley and his Whitehall followers that it is doing precisely the reverse, and a wide trade body of thought believes they are right.

An examination of the registration of the first nine months reveals that a number of treble quota subjects have surprisingly been registered as single, among them the record-breaking "The Citadel".

The Act stipulates, probably as a result of careless wording, that of all British films registered 50 per cent must be in actual footage. This makes it impossible for any distributor, no matter how many double or triple features he makes, to fulfil his quota by means of them alone. Further it imposes footage obligations upon him which many consider ridiculous. As a hypothetical case an example might be found in a renter showing 60,000 feet of foreign film and 15,000 feet of British film. This total of 75,000 would call upon him to fulfil a quota minimum of 12,000 feet. On actual footage he has a 3,000 feet excess.

With Renewal

"MOTION PICTURE HERALD is as important to an exhibitor as a spare tire to a tourist. A good publication, well worth your price increase."
—C. J. BARRE, Edgar Theatre,
Edgard, Louisiana.

Supposing that one of his films is a treble quota and the other a double, he is entitled to a credit of 38,000 feet. According to the Act, 19,000 feet of this must be in actual celluloid. Had he been content to fulfil his quota by two single quota subjects of 7,500 feet each, he would have had an excess over actual quota requirements of 3,000 feet, whereas now he has a quota deficiency of 4,000 feet.

By making British films on too high a cost basis, front rank distributors here have found themselves with a nominal footage more than twice their actual footage, and though their actual footage is more than the minimum required under the Act, it cannot be half the minimum footage and therefore does not comply.

The Case of "The Citadel"

In "The Citadel" case, MGM, by registering it as a single, have, with their other subjects, acquired a sufficient footage to meet their quota obligations. If they had registered it as a double they would have been short on their quota by 10,000 feet, if as a treble by 20,000 feet. In other words, had they registered "The Citadel" on the full credit basis to which they are entitled they would have needed three or four other single length films to keep within the law. The effect of this complicated clause with its studied insistence on a proportion of single quota features—for that is what it amounts to—debars a renter handling foreign films from ever fulfilling his quota by quality pictures in the double or treble category.

This anomalous position in an Act designed to stimulate quality films actually serves to encourage renters to cover their minimum requirements and no more. A number of renters who decided to sponsor better class British films and exceed their minimum quota requirements are now finding themselves in difficulties. The new need for registering triple cost subjects as singles, it is claimed, militates against the production of higher class British films, and the view is taken that American organizations in Britain who sought the aid of the Government in producing super films cannot now be expected to take the risk involved in high cost pictures when they can get the same quota results by making pictures at £15,000 each.

The matter has been brought forcibly to the attention of the Board of Trade and comprehensive memoranda presented explaining the position. It is certain that the Board of Trade will place the matter before the Films Council for discussion. Diplomatic indications have been offered Wardour Street that penalisation for quota offenses in this regard may not be enforced for the first year. It is likely that more than one super film now in production will not be registered until the second year of the Act. Beyond that, the question of amendment is a matter for hope rather than prophecy.

These entanglements of the Act supply an odd comment not only upon Mr. Stanley's quality apologia but upon those critics of the Bill who, as witness Ian Cameron in the Daily Telegraph, claim that the independent cinema exhibitor is being sacrificed upon the altar of Anglo-American reciprocity. Basil Dean, one of the sponsors of the abortive separate quota idea, currently being propagated by the inactive producers, likewise has gone into print with the comment, more significant maybe than he realises, that Mr. Stanley sought to build up a new British film industry with the aid of alien finance and and has failed.

The Production Figures

Examination of production figures to December 31st reveal that only 52 British features were registered and that the year's total, including those films rushed into registration in the last few weeks of the expiring Act, is only 161. Of the 52 renters' quota films only seven have been registered as trebles and fifteen as doubles, thus bringing a virtual total of 81 quota features among the entire ranks of distributors here. Exhibitors' quota films totaled 19.

Both the five labour unions representing the industry's workers, who have petitioned the Board of Trade for an increase of renters' quota, and the academic and enlightened Simon Rowson, are united in the contention that the only thing the Act would seem to have increased is the volume of unemployment. Mr. Rowson, who sees no increase either in volume or in value, pleads for amending legislation without specifying the form it should take, claims that of audiences visiting British cinemas only eight out of thirty-two millions normally will watch British films, points to the 86 millions in the United States, 24 millions in Britain and 30 millions elsewhere, a total of 140 millions, who regularly see American films. The British film, he claims, has an audience outside Britain that at best totals only two millions.

Emphasising the functions of the United States film as an instrument of American trade, Mr. Rowson pleads the case of the British film and its circulation abroad, saying, "The political, economic and industrial value of films is enormous to America. To Britain it is almost negligible." Later, however, Mr. Rowson emphasises that whereas the likelihood of an amendment to existing legislation is not close, there is no reason why a reciprocal understanding on the import and export of each other's films might not now be arrived at by the two countries by private treaty outside State circles.

Unions Also Protest

Pointedly the labour unions, banded under the Film Industry Employees' Council, remind Captain Euan Wallace, who questioned the probability that production might drop to under eighty films in the first year of the Act, that now he should implement his promise that if it did the matter would be considered carefully.

The Act's Government sponsors claimed that the measure was designed to protect not merely production but the entire industry. With producers constitutionally restricted to the making of 71 films in nine months, exhibitors incapable of meeting their commitments economically, employees normally engaged at a minimum of 30 of Britain's 80-odd stages now registering an unemployment figure of more than 80 per cent, and foreign distributors who have sought to set up production of the Hollywood standard penalised for doing so, and faced with the possible need for confining quality production to Hollywood, the impracticability of that intention and aim is considered tragically patent.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

GIRL'S SCHOOL: Anne Shirley, Nan Grey, Ralph Bellamy, Noah Beery, Jr.—Direction or something turned sour on this. Everyone except Noah Beery, Jr., overacts. Anne Shirley seems straining too hard. Her charm lies in her naturalness. The teachers are sort of burlesqued. Pretty boring. And, by the way, don't advertise Ralph Bellamy very heavily in this in spite of the billing Columbia allots him. He comes into the picture for little more than five minutes all told, and then only as one of the teacher's husband-to-be. Bad box office. Played December 30-31.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

JUVENILE COURT: Paul Kelly, Rita Hayworth, Frankie Darro—Not so hot! It's all been done before and so much better. Ho-hum. Played December 27.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LAW OF THE TEXAN: Buck Jones, Dorothy Fay—A good enough western that pleased. Buck is a ranger who goes out to get his man and does. Pleased the chewers and spitters who frequent the place on Friday and Saturday, but not as often as they used to and not nearly often enough. Where have they gone?—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

OUTLAWS OF THE PRAIRIE: Charles Starrett, Donald Grayson—A real good western. Such fine musical numbers by Grayson and the Sons of the Pioneers provide good entertainment for those not rabid western fans. And the rest suited the fans. Played December 23-24.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

OVERLAND EXPRESS: Buck Jones, Marjorie Reynolds—Average or a little better than the usual western. Bad storm so business was only fair. Played December 24.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

STRANGE CASE OF DR. MEADE, THE: Jack Holt, Beverly Roberts, Noah Beery, Jr.—Jack Holt is a big favorite here and Columbia gave him a fine story in this one. Well liked by everybody. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 4-5.—Jim Haney, Milan Theatre, Milan, Ind. General patronage.

THERE'S THAT WOMAN AGAIN: Melvyn Douglas, Virginia Bruce, Margaret Lindsay—Fairly entertaining, but pictures of this type carry very little weight and slim story value; your reviewer says so-so. Running time, 73 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

YOU CAN'T TAKE IT WITH YOU: Jean Arthur, Lionel Barrymore, James Stewart, Edward Arnold, Mischa Auer, Ann Miller, Spring Byington—Here is a remarkable picture. Everybody satisfied. We had a blizzard during the time we showed this 100 per cent feature and business was naturally affected. Played December 26-27.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

First National

ANGELS WITH DIRTY FACES: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Ann Sheridan, Humphrey Bogart, "Crime School Kids"—Tops; in any spot a great show. Good story, good action, good interest. Step on it, especially in the Catholic spots. Running time, 105 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

ANGELS WITH DIRTY FACES: James Cagney, Ann Sheridan, Pat O'Brien, Humphrey Bogart, "Crime School Kids"—Made to order for the small town. A terrific thriller that should do some business even in these tough times. A couple more and maybe the public will forgive "Boy Meets Girl." Played December 28-30.—Warren L. Weber, Ritz Theatre, Stafford, Kansas. General patronage.

ANGELS WITH DIRTY FACES: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Ann Sheridan, Humphrey Bogart, "Crime School Kids"—This is the kind of picture that your patrons will see, then go out and send in the business. We played it Christmas and it held up fine for two more days. It will stand a boost but be sure that you sell it for what it is because the title will fool those who are not familiar with the picture.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY MUSKETEERS: Margaret Lindsay, Marie Wilson, Ann Sheridan, John Litel, Janet Chapman—Very good melodrama in the program classification. Margaret Lindsay deserves more attention from her studio. Played December 20.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box-office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

FOUR DAUGHTERS: Lane Sisters, Gale Page, Jeffrey Lynn, John Garfield, Claude Rains, May Robson—One of the finest pictures I have seen in many a day. Extra money will have to be spent in advertising to try to get them in. Will please 100 per cent and didn't cost a fortune to make. Played November 30-December 1.—Warren L. Weber, Ellingwood Theatre, Ellingwood, Kansas. General patronage.

FOUR DAUGHTERS: Lane Sisters, Gale Page, Jeffrey Lynn, John Garfield, Claude Rains, May Robson—The perfect picture. Everyone who saw it liked it. Played January 7-9.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

FOUR DAUGHTERS: Lane Sisters, Gale Page, Jeffrey Lynn, John Garfield, Claude Rains, May Robson—We didn't do so good with this picture and it certainly wasn't the picture's fault. It is a good picture but the title doesn't mean much and these girls are not too popular at my box office. Played it on our best nights to less than average business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FOUR DAUGHTERS: Lane Sisters, Gale Page, Jeffrey Lynn, John Garfield, Claude Rains, May Robson—Superb entertainment that is down-to-earth vintage. Everyone in the cast did expert characterizations. Business was fair. Played December 25-26.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GARDEN OF THE MOON: Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay, John Payne, Johnnie Davis—Very fine entertainment but lacked the draw we felt it was entitled to. Margaret Lindsay is still tops here and Pat O'Brien is also very well liked. Running time, 90 minutes. Played January 11-12.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

OVER THE GOAL: June Travis, William Hopper, Johnny Davis—Very good on bargain night. Running time, 68 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SECRETS OF AN ACTRESS: Kay Francis, George Brent—I don't want to know any more about any actress' secrets. The first real downright flop from Warners this year, and what a flop. Played December 18-19.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SUBMARINE D-1: Pat O'Brien, Wayne Morris, George Brent, Doris Weston—Went back to pick up this old one in place of one of the weaker "B" pictures under this year's group. It was a good move and pleased everyone. Running time, 105 minutes. Played January 4-5.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Grand National

DAMAGED GOODS: Pedro de Cordoba—Having sat in at a private screening of this subject, which tells the present day fact of social hygiene in a very inoffensive way, this picture is a credit to the cinema world, and I personally feel that any exhibitors interested in the betterment of his community would be well advised to play this. It has been doing outstanding business in most situations and has the strong support of churches and medical health officers. Running time, 60 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

ROLLIN' PLAINS: Tex Ritter, Harriet Spencer—Why did they let us play this amateurish western? Terrible.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SPIRIT OF YOUTH: Joe Louis, Edna Mae Harris, Clarence Muse—This is a fair program with a colored cast. Clarence Muse good. Joe Louis does some terrible acting. Business not so good as we expected. Running time, 66 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

TRIGGER PALS: Art Jarrett, Lee Powell, Al St. John—I have just finished playing the new Grand National western picture starring Art Jarrett, Lee (Lone Ranger) Powell and Al St. John, and was well pleased with the way the audience received this new series and think this new singing western star, Art Jarrett, is "going places." He has a very pleasing voice and the supporting cast was very good. We did a good business on this one. Recommend it highly for your western fans.—Lee Sproule, Rex Theatre, Newton, Kansas. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BLOCKHEADS: Laurel and Hardy, Patricia Ellis, Billy Gilbert—This is a belly laugh from start to finish. Did business and pleased. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 6-7.—Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

BOYS TOWN: Mickey Rooney, Spencer Tracy, Henry Hull—It's the tops in entertainment, draw and for pleasing all. What more can be said? Played January 4-5—Cecil Ward, Stone Theatre, Bassetts, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

BOYS TOWN: Spencer Tracy, Mickey Rooney, Henry Hull—Here's one that is tailor made. It brings everyone into your theatre. Something no other pictures will do. Father Flanagan well known here and everyone is a booster for Boys Town. Why not try another for about September. Running time, 93 minutes. Played December 29-30-31.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

CHRISTMAS CAROL, A: Reginald Owen, Terry Kilburn, Gene Lockhart, Kathleen Lockhart, Lynne Carver, Ann Rutherford—Here's a little picture that will stand alone in any spot and please all. Running time, 70 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

CHRISTMAS CAROL, A: Reginald Owen, Terry Kilburn, Gene Lockhart, Lynne Carver, Ann Rutherford—Swell, and while it didn't break any house records, it certainly did a mighty good job of satisfying better than ordinary business. Play it even if you are a bit late, or wait till next year. It will still be good.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CITADEL, THE: Robert Donat, Rosalind Russell—A top production in anybody's house. We were afraid of this one as being too heavy for our small town, but can truthfully say that we were wrong. Did better than average Sunday business. So happened that the Chicago papers had the article on the "best picture of 1938" and it did not hurt us in the least. Truly excellent in all respects. Running time, 112 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

CITADEL, THE: Robert Donat, Rosalind Russell—Absolutely one of the finest pictures I have ever played of this type. The picture proves to be very educational on subjects in the medical profession, throwing a light on the undiscussed practices used by doctors. The picture tends to throw the medical profession open to criticism. A great picture; should not be pased up. Played December 29-30.—Sam Schiwetz, Rialto Theatre, Three Rivers, Texas. General patronage.

DRAMATIC SCHOOL: Luise Rainer, Paulette Goddard, Alan Marshal, Ann Rutherford, Lana Turner—A good enough picture but not for towns as small as mine. The usual Sunday business was not here but the patrons who saw the feature and appreciated the actors' performance were satisfied. It won't please the younger people and it won't do business. Didn't mean a thing. Played January 8-10.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LISTEN DARLING: Freddie Bartholomew, Judy Garland, Mary Astor, Walter Pidgeon—A very good little program picture and while they say that they don't make them, it is still a fact. Worth a date on your weekend or bargain night.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LORD JEFF: Freddie Bartholomew, Mickey Rooney, Gale Sondergaard, Charles Coburn—Played this one after "Boys Town" and did dandy midweek business. Good picture. Running time, 85 minutes. Played January 4-5.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

LOVE FINDS ANDY HARDY: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Cecilia Parker, Ann Rutherford, Lana Turner—An excellent comedy with a very competent cast. It is the first of the Hardy Series we have shown here but you can bet it will not be the last. The boys are calling for more already. It is very easy to see why "Tricky Mickey" has skyrocketed to fame and fortune, after viewing one of his pictures. He's a natural. The picture is well cast with such appealing juveniles as Judy Garland, Cecilia Parker, Lana Turner and Ann Rutherford, together with that able and popular veteran (the ideal father), Lewis Stone. Book it and make everybody happy. However, be sure to dust off that old S.R.O. sign. Running time, 90 minutes. Played July 7.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

MERRILY WE LIVE: Constance Bennett, Brian Aherne, Billie Burke, Patsy Kelly—This was one of the screwiest shows I've run. It failed to draw but it pleased. Some swell gags in this show. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 18-19.—Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

OUT WEST WITH THE HARDYS: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, Cecilia Parker, Fay Holden, Virginia Weidler—I guess this is the best way to start the New Year off. All you have to do is let the people know they're playing. They'll take care of the rest. A real pleasure to greet your patrons after they've seen this. Mickey Rooney undoubtedly greatest box office attraction in the business. Played January 1-2.—Sam Schiwetz, Rialto Theatre, Three Rivers, Tex. General patronage.

OUT WEST WITH THE HARDYS: Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone, Cecilia Parker, Fay Holden, Virginia Weidler—A knockout picture which played to above average business. Played January 11-13.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SPRING MADNESS: Lew Ayres, Maureen O'Sullivan—Just a fair comedy.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

STABLEMATES: Mickey Rooney, Wallace Beery—Here's a swell team and a grand performance they give. It's another of those down-to-earth stories the people all like so much. Why can't they see this is the type the people want? Running time, 90 minutes. Played January 13-14.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

STABLEMATES: Mickey Rooney, Wallace Beery—Good and drew well and pleased 100 per cent.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

TOO HOT TO HANDLE: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Walter Pidgeon, Leo Carrillo, Walter Connolly—A very good picture but not up to the "Test Pilot" standard. Gable and Loy both are swell. Business above average. Played January 10-11.—Cecil Ward, Stone Theatre, Bassetts, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

TRADER HORN (reissue): Harry Carey, Edwina Booth—If we could get a few more reissues like this one, which would do the same business, we wouldn't be hard to get along with. Business very good. Running time, 126 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage..

VACATION FROM LOVE: Dennis O'Keefe, Florence Rice—Very nice program picture which did not do much business. O'Keefe and Florence make a nice team. In fact, we like Florence teamed with anyone. Lots of fun! Played December 30-31.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Monogram

GUNSMOKE TRAIL: Jack Randall—Good western. All in this series have been very good. Running time, 57 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MARINES ARE HERE, THE: June Travis, Gordon Oliver—Fine little picture. Running time, 60 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

TWO GUN JUSTICE: Tim McCoy, Betty Compson—Good western. All the westerns in this series seem to be taken from the same story or same idea. Why not get a new type of story for this good western star. Running time, 57 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

WHERE THE BUFFALO ROAM: Tex Ritter, Dorothy Short—The best Ritter picture yet. Let's hope he continues the pickups. Ritter in my town is a top draw and he shows he has the stuff for westerns. But, why the same villain? Let's change, Tex. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 6-7.—Cecil Ward, Stone Theatre, Bassetts, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

ARKANSAS TRAVELER: Bob Burns, Jean Parker, Fay Bainter, Irvin S. Cobb, John Beal—Not a single complaint. He should be kept in roles of this kind. Played January 1-2.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

ARTISTS AND MODELS ABROAD: Jack Benny, Joan Bennett, Mary Boland, Yacht Club Boys—Picture did not please the Benny fans here. They don't go strongly on the fashion parade. Played December 24-25.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

BOOLOO: Colin Tapley, Suratna Asmaka—It's hokum but these small town boys go for it, so we feed it to them and they like it better than some of these big supers that don't mean a thing. Wild animal pictures are still all right out here where men are men and the women wear sunbonnets.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CAMPUS CONFESSIONS: Hank Luisetti, Betty Grable, Elanore Whitney—This series got off to a fine start here. Town is basketball wild so they ate it up.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

CAMPUS CONFESSIONS: Hank Luisetti, Betty Grable, Eleanore Whitney—Okay college play. Nothing outstanding and yet manages to amuse generally. Played December 9-10.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

COCOANUT GROVE: Fred MacMurray, Harriet Hilliard, Ben Blue—An all 'round good picture. Very, very good music. Running time, 88 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

HEART OF ARIZONA: William Boyd, Natalie Moorehead—In spite of the fact that these stories are always so impossible, they seem to do a little more than average business on Friday-Saturday bookings. We just can't understand it. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 6-7.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

IF I WERE KING: Ronald Colman, Frances Dee, Basil Rathbone, Ellen Drew—This was certainly swell entertainment. Box office just fair with allocation too high. Colman, Drew and Rathbone very excellent. Played December 14-15.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

ILLEGAL TRAFFIC: J. Carroll Naish, Mary Carlisle—J. Carroll Naish is one of the favorite mid-week attractions here. Nice business. Fair pictures. Played December 27-28.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

KING OF ALCATRAZ: Lloyd Nolan, Gail Patrick, J. Carroll Naish—This is what my patrons like. Action and at a price where you can make something. Nothing big but it pleases. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 3.—Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

KING OF ALCATRAZ: Lloyd Nolan, J. Carroll Naish, Gail Patrick—A swell action "melo" masquerading under a totally misleading title. Otherwise okay. Played December 6.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MYSTERIOUS RIDER: Russell Hayden, Weldon Heyburn, Charlotte Fields—Let's have more of its like. It's a pleasure to get a western of the Harry Sherman make. Far better than the average run of westerns. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 30-31.—Cecil Ward, Stone Theatre, Bassetts, Va. Small town and rural patronage.

PRIDE OF THE WEST: William Boyd, Charlotte Fields—Good. Running time, 64 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SAY IT IN FRENCH: Ray Milland, Olympe Bradna—Very amusing farce comedy which failed to draw. Pleased all who saw it. Played January 8.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

SONS OF THE LEGION: Donald O'Connor, Billy Lee, Lynne Overman, Elizabeth Patterson—A swell kid picture. Had repeaters second night. Played January 13-14.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

STOLEN HEAVEN: Lewis Stone, Olympe Bradna, Gene Raymond, Glenda Farrell—One of the poorest pictures I ever played. Pass this one up. Played January 3-4.—Sam Schiwetz, Rialto Theatre, Three Rivers, Texas. General patronage.

THANKS FOR THE MEMORY: Shirley Ross, Bob Hope, Charles Butterworth—A pretty cute program picture that got by with not many squawks. After the last ten or twelve crime or murder pictures from Paramount, this was somewhat of a change. As for the majors, Paramount seems to have cornered the bookings on the lower half of a double bill. It is about time they showed a lot of improvement if they are to stay in my theatres.—Warren L. Weber, Ellingwood Theatre, Ellingwood, Kansas. General patronage.

THANKS FOR THE MEMORY: Shirley Ross, Bob Hope, Charles Butterworth—Did better than average pre-Christmas business, which is invariably bad, year after year. This picture is one of the best "B" pictures of the year. Cast, acting and story is good, also plug song "Two Sleepy People," which continues to be nationwide song hit. Our patrons like Bob Hope but he needs names with him. Played December 19-22.—H. Ulman, Ulman's, New and Delmar Theatres, Salisbury, Md. General patronage.

TOUCHDOWN ARMY: John Howard, Mary Carlisle—A very pleasing program picture that satisfied all. Running time, 71 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

TRAIL DUST: William Boyd, James Ellison, George Hayes—Good Cassidy. Running time, 75 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Republic

ARMY GIRL: Preston Foster, Madge Evans, Neil Hamilton, Ruth Donnelly—The independent production of the year. While it did not draw to standout business due, to bad weather, it is a fine production and the fans will like it. It has action, drama and romance, well blended and is entertaining from start to finish. Played December 27-28.—H. Ulman, Ulman's, New and Delmar Theatres, Salisbury, Md. General patronage.

ARMY GIRL: Preston Foster, Madge Evans, Neil Hamilton, Ruth Donnelly—Pretty good on the whole. Not a special by any means and we're glad we paid no more for it, in view of the business it did. Still and all it's as good as many we've paid more for and suffered. Madge Evans is so good we wonder all Hollywood isn't seeking her every service. Played December 21-22.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BILLY THE KID RETURNS: Roy Rogers, Smiley Burnette, Mary Hart—This lad has taken Autry's place as the number one box office western star. Autry just does average Saturday business but Rogers does about 20 per cent above average.—Warren L. Weber, Ellingwood Theatre, Ellingwood, Kansas. General patronage.

BILLY THE KID RETURNS: Roy Rogers, Smiley Burnette, Mary Hart—This boy is getting better and with Smiley Burnette and his music to help, he can't miss. There is plenty of action and a lot of singing and music and that seems to be what my patrons crave.—Mayne P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CALL OF THE YUKON: Richard Arlen, Beverly Roberts, Lyle Talbot—This is a dandy. Any audience should go for it big. Good attendance on this in combination with "A Desperate Adventure." Played December 4-5.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DESPERATE ADVENTURE, A: Ramon Novarro, Margaret Tallichet, Marian March, Eric Blore—Novarro only needs a big story to revive interest and he should be good box office. This isn't the story, however, but it will get by. A few complaints on this, nevertheless. Played December 3-5.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

DOWN IN "ARKANSAW": Ralph Byrd, Waver Brothers and Elviry, Pinky Tomlin—Good enough for any spot. Would go for a Sunday show.. Play it and watch the nickels roll in.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

NIGHT HAWK, THE: Robert Livingston, June Travis, Robert Armstrong—This picture was well received as the other half of a double feature. We like Bob Livingston in this type of picture rather than westerns and I am sure he will become very popular if given the proper parts. We have played nearly all of the Republic releases this season and they have all been good. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 7-8.—R. V. Rule, Gym Theatre, Beaverton, Mich. Small town and country patronage.

OLD BARN DANCE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Helen Valkis—There is a Santa Claus and I don't mean maybe. Played this with Laurel and Hardy comedy and they came in droves. Gene, I want to thank you from the bottom of my heart for the merriest Christmas I ever had, and look forward to playing every one of your pictures in 1939. Brother exhibitors, play this one. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 23-24.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

OVERLAND STAGE RAIDERS: Three Mesquiteers (John Wayne, Ray Corrigan, Max Terhune), Louise Brooks—Average western which drew average business. No complaints. Played January 13-14.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

OVERLAND STAGE RAIDERS: Three Mesquiteers (John Wayne, Ray Corrigan, Max Terhune), Louise Brooks—These boys are all right and they are beginning to collect a real following. Republic sells them right and I would say play them.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PRAIRIE MOON: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Shirley Deane—The usual offering for this team and that means tops. We liked it and so did all the fans. It has action, music, romance and comedy. We doubled this with "The Night Hawk" and it brought us the largest gross in four years. We not only stood them up but had to turn many away. Thanks to you, Gene, and a salute to you, Smiley. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 7-8.—R. V. Rule, Gym Theatre, Beaverton, Mich. Small town and country patronage.

SHEIK STEPS OUT, THE: Ramon Novarro, Lola Lane—Fair program picture. Running time, 66 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SPRINGTIME IN THE ROCKIES: Donald Wood, Patricia Ellis, Edward Brophy—Very good western. Running time, 60 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

STORM OVER BENGAL: Patric Knowles, Rochelle Hudson, Richard Cromwell—Average action drama which failed to draw. Played January 9-10.—E. M. Freiburger, Paramount Theatre, Dewey, Okla. Small town patronage.

WESTERN JAMBOREE: Gene Autry, Smiley Burnette, Jean Rouverol—Another good Autry. Plenty of action, humor and good western songs is what my patrons expect in a good western and the Autrys give them what they want. Running time, 60 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

RKO Radio

AFFAIRS OF ANNABEL, THE: Jack Oakie, Lucille Ball, Ruth Donnelly—There's not enough idea here for a series of pictures. Hardly enough for this one. In fact, our patrons were thoroughly disappointed, that is, the few who came. No dice. Played December 13.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Pennacook, N. H. General patronage.

BREAKING THE ICE: Bobby Breen, Charles Ruggles, Dolores Costello, Irene Dare—We did better for this attraction than we have been doing for a month, as fortunately we had good weather, after a series of storms. Satisfied with the kid skater winning honors. Played December 31.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

CAREFREE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Ralph Bellamy—These shows are poison. Failed to please; failed to draw. One patron remarked that if I had any more dogs like this to start a kennel club. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 4-5.—Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

CAREFREE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Ralph Bellamy—This picture has played everything but the country schools, so my theatre is getting closer to being a garage every week. Great dancing in this one but an impossible story. Business was so poor that we couldn't give a second show on Sunday night. Please pass the Neely Bill. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 8-9.—Jim Haney, Milan Theatre, Milan, Ind. General patronage.

FIT FOR A KING: Joe E. Brown, Helen Mack, Paul Kelly—Late but okay where they go for Joe's comedy. Played December 16-17.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GUN LAW: George O'Brien, Rita Oehmen, Ray Whitley—Okay western. Whitley's singing helps. Played December 9-10.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MAD MISS MANTON, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Henry Fonda, Frances Mercer, Whitney Bourne—Very good. Played December 7-8.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NEXT TIME I MARRY: James Ellison, Lucille Ball—A very amusing picture that should please nearly all who see it. I ran it on a midnight show. Good story, good acting on the part of Ellison and Ball. Should stand up for two days midweek. Played December 31,—Sam Schiwetz, Rialto Theatre, Three Rivers, Texas. General patronage.

PAINTED DESERT: George O'Brien, Ray Whitley—A fair western. Nothing to rave about, even if one is a western addict.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY AT THE CIRCUS: Tommy Kelly, Ann Gillis, Edgar Kennedy, Spanky McFarland—Good little program picture.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SKY GIANT: Richard Dix, Chester Morris, Joan Fontaine—Satisfied but we ran into a mess of bad weather and the attendance was small. Played December 17.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SKY GIANT: Richard Dix, Chester Morris, Joan Fontaine—Only fair. Played December 2-3.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

ALWAYS IN TROUBLE: Jane Withers, Robert Kellard, Jean Rogers—A fair picture that pleased. This one having played every town around me, I featured a sportscope short called "Bird Dogs" over it, and worked on the Fish and Game clubs in the vicinity and got all the boys in. Many had seen the feature and walked out when the shorts were over. After my present contracts expire I am going to declare an open season on film salesmen. I just oiled up my gun. Running time, 69 minutes. Played January 15-16.—Jim Haney, Milan Theatre, Milan, Ind. General patronage.

ALWAYS IN TROUBLE: Jane Withers, Robert Kellard, Jean Rogers—It looks like Fox is trying to kill the best box office star it has in the small town. I guess they spend all their dough in trying to build Temple back (no chance). I would like to see Jane get the break she deserves in story, director and a good supporting cast. Why not, Fox?—Warren L. Weber, Ritz Theatre, Stafford, Kansas. General patronage.

ALWAYS IN TROUBLE: Jane Withers, Robert Kellard, Jean Rogers—A pretty good picture but Jane Withers should be given a story and some production value. No more business than a picture that cost half as much would have done. Where do they get that stuff that she is such a big bet and where are all of those "A" pictures that they sold us last summer?—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BATTLE OF BROADWAY: Victor McLaglen, Brian Donlevy, Louise Hovick, Raymond Walburn—Nothing big to this show but it kept my patrons laughing. Everybody said they liked it. Just fair business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 28-29.—Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

BORNEO: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—It did not please many. Lots of kicks. Played December 30-31.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

CHANGE OF HEART: Gloria Stuart, Michael Whalen—Fair program. Running time, 66 minutes. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

FIVE OF A KIND: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt, Claire Trevor, Joan Davis, Slim Summerville—Not the drawing power they once had but you'll have to admit they are still five cute kids. Believe that in another year they'll have something besides their unusual reputation on account of their birth. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 8-9.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

FIVE OF A KIND: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt, Claire Trevor, Joan Davis, Slim Summerville—Played Disney's "Ferdinand the Bull" with it and managed to do almost average business. Just another programmer. Played December 14-15.—Warren L. Weber, Ritz Theatre, Stafford, Kansas. General patronage.

FIVE OF A KIND: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt, Claire Trevor, Joan Davis, Slim Summerville—This pictures does show the Quints off and in a big way. The story or plot is just there because they usually do have one in Mr. Zanuck's pictures and curiosity will bring in the patrons, not in droves, but it will do a nice business. At least, it did here. Fox hasn't been doing so well for me but they are beginning to look some better.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

GATEWAY: Don Ameche, Arlen Whelan, Lyle Talbot, Gregory Ratoff, Binnie Barnes—This wasn't the show that I expected. Had no kicks but it didn't please like some of the Fox shows. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 20.—Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood, Mary Carlisle—Another fine reissue. Running time, 81 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GATEWAY: Don Ameche, Arleen Whelan—Just a picture. Will get by on a double feature program. Played December 27.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ISLAND IN THE SKY: Gloria Stuart, Michael Whalen, Paul Kelly, June Storey—Fair program. Running time, 67 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

JUST AROUND THE CORNER: Shirley Temple, Charles Farrell, Joan Davis, Armanda Duff, Bert Lahr, Bill Robinson—Deliver us from playing any more Temple pictures. The last four have shown a steady and fast decline but this one hit the basement. Might go over okay on a one day double bill or with a giveaway. It takes a lotta gall to allocate these Temple pictures in any spot except the lowest allocation. Yet, Fox keeps these in the top brackets. —Warren L. Weber, Ritz Theatre, Stafford, Kansas. General patronage.

JUST AROUND THE CORNER: Shirley Temple, Charles Farrell, Joan Davis, Armanda Duff, Bill Robinson, Bert Lahr—They gave this Temple some production and it pleased.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

JUST AROUND THE CORNER: Shirley Temple, Joan Davis, Charles Farrell, Armanda Duff, Bert Lahr, Bill Robinson—We couldn't even get the kids interested and we played it on a Friday and Saturday so they could come without being kept up late. My patrons just don't go for this little star anymore and it looks like they better put the swan song in her next picture. Not worth the rental they are allocating her pictures.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

KEEP SMILING: Jane Withers, Gloria Stuart, Heny Wilcoxon, Helen Westley—20th Century-Fox ought to be ashamed to waste the talents of this potential star in such mediocre material. And the production hardly looks like 10c worth. But, it's probably the equal of any of her others, so book accordingly. Played December 23-24.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

KEEP SMILING: Jane Withers, Gloria Stuart, Henry Wilcoxon, Helen Westley—Jane does more at the box office than Shirley Temple, but kid stars in my town don't mean a thing. They just stay away. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 25-26. —Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

KENTUCKY: Loretta Young, Richard Greene, Walter Brennan—Opened with a bang and ended with a grand bang. Stood them out for six solid days and the ending day was as big as the ending of "Alexander's Ragtime Band." It brought out people that don't come to our theatres and created word of mouth praise that can't be bought. It deserves extended playing time in every theatre in the country. If ever a flawless picture has been produced, this is it. Played January 2.—H. Ulman, Ulman's, New and Delmar Theatre, Salisbury, Md. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40 (reissue): Will Rogers, Rochelle Hudson, Richard Cromwell, Jane Darwell—They, my patrons, were very glad to see Will back again. Picture does extra business here. What a grand show. Beats lots of new shows. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 21-22.—Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

MY LUCKY STAR: Sonja Henie, Richard Greene, Joan Davis, Cesar Romero, Buddy Ebsen—Just an ordinary show that goes into special bracket. Rental too high to come out. This doesn't draw like the first one. Her shows just like a circus. If you seen one, you've seen them all. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 1-2.—Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

ONE WILD NIGHT: Dick Baldwin, June Lang, Lyle Talbot, J. Edward Bromberg—We let it get old, then used it for our New Year's Eve Party. It seemed to please, but 'most anything would do that at a time like this.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Shirley Temple, Gloria Stuart, Jack Haley, Randolph Scott—Fine. Best business ever done on a Temple picture. Running time, 81 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

ROAD DEMONS: Henry Arthur, Jean Valerie—A nice little racing story with some of the old stock shots of smash-ups that were worked in nicely, and it pleased as the other half of our weekend double bill. Played January 6-7.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ROAD DEMONS: Henry Arthur, Joan Valerie—A very interesting feature dealing with auto racing that was very well taken here. Had enough action and humor to completely satisfy all. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

SALLY, IRENE AND MARY: Alice Faye, Tony Martin, Jimmy Durante, Joan Davis—Very good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SPEED TO BURN: Lynn Bari, Michael Whalen—A race horse picture that pleased the weekend crowd. Lynn Bari very good and so was Michael Whalen. Running time, 62 minutes. Played January 6-7.—Jim Haney, Milan Theatre, Milan, Ind. General patronage.

STRAIGHT, PLACE AND SHOW: Ritz Brothers, Richard Arlen, Phyllis Brooks, Ethel Merman—A good comedy. Played December 13-14.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

STRAIGHT, PLACE AND SHOW: Ritz Brothers, Richard Arlen, Phyllis Brooks, Ethel Merman—Positively nothing to it. No business on this, thank goodness. Played November 10-11.—Warren L. Weber, Ritz Theatre, Stafford, Kansas. General patronage.

SUBMARINE PATROL: Richard Greene, Nancy Kelly, Preston Foster, George Bancroft—The lowest Thursday and Friday gross in several months. Picture is okay but you can't do business with a cast of a couple of Joes and Lucys. Been better off not to have played this one by several dollars. Played January 5-6.—Warren L. Weber, Ellingwood Theatre, Ellingwood, Kansas.

SUBMARINE PATROL: Richard Greene, Nancy Kelly, Preston Foster, George Bancroft—An excellent action picture.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SUBMARINE PATROL: Richard Greene, Nancy Kelly, Preston Foster, George Bancroft—Although the picture is okay, it is another of the nameless wonders from Fox. Zanuck has probably discovered by now that good pictures won't draw unless there is someone in the cast that means something. Witness "Straight, Place and Show," "Up the River," "Hold That Co-ed," "Thanks for Everything." All fairly good shows that starve at the box office and every one allocated a couple of notches too high. Played December 25-26.—Warren L. Weber, Ritz Theatre, Stafford, Kansas. General patronage.

SUBMARINE PATROL: Richard Greene, Nancy Kelly, Preston Foster, George Bancroft, J. Farrell McDonald, Slim Summerville—A very good picture that did a nice New Year's business and I think that everyone was satisfied. Why don't they let this Greene boy go out and play with the little tough guys and learn how to talk American. Then, we could stand him. The supporting cast was good and there is still a place for plenty of the old timers like J. Farrell MacDonald and Slim Summerville. Play it on your best time.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SUEZ: Tyrone Power, Loretta Young, Annabella—I am beginning to believe that Fox has lost the touch or something. This was a sad disappointment at the box office, despite the dough that was spent on it. Only minnow business at whale allocation. Played December 11-13.—Warren L. Weber, Ritz Theatre, Stafford, Kansas. General patronage.

SUEZ: Tyrone Power, Loretta Young, Annabella—Something didn't take. We advertised this picture in a big way, used it on our best nights and still lacked plenty of paying out. It is a big picture, is well produced and acted, but the title or something scared them away from it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SUEZ: Tyrone Power, Loretta Young, Annabella—A mighty interesting picture. We do not believe it deserved the panning many critics have given it. It didn't break any records for us but everyone enjoyed it.—Played December 18-19.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

THANKS FOR EVERYTHING: Adolphe Menjou, Jack Oakie, Jack Haley, Marjorie Weaver, Binnie Barnes, Tony Martin—Just a picture with very little entertaining value. Running time, 70 minutes.—W. E. McPhee, Strand Theatre, Old Town, Maine. General patronage.

TIME OUT FOR MURDER: Michael Whalen, Gloria Stuart—Pretty good little picture about a reporter and a murder that has been done so often that they are using it for eighth grade plays. We used it on bargain night and it didn't do too much business but we paid for it just the same.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TRIP TO PARIS, A: Jed Prouty, Shirley Deane, Russell Gleason—Was very good mid-week show. Pleased all.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

WE'RE GOING TO BE RICH: Gracie Fields, Victor McLaglen, Brian Donlevy—After seeing this picture I wasn't surprised that there was a Revolutionary War.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

United Artists

ADVENTURES OF TOM SAWYER: Tommy Kelly, May Robson, Jackie Moran, Victor Jory, Walter Brennan—As you all know by now, a wonderful picture. Victor Jory really played his part as good as could possibly have been done. Why don't we see more of him? He is really good. Running time, 91 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

52ND STREET: Kenny Baker, Zasu Pitts, Leo Carrillo, Pat Paterson—Better than expected after reading some reports in this department. Running time, 82 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

YOUNG IN HEART, THE: Janet Gaynor, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Paulette Goddard, Billie Burke, Roland Young, Minnie Dupree.—The Carleton Family will get them. Had splendid reports on this and it did swell business. We featured the entire cast, as Minnie Dupree is the "find" of the year. Every part is flawlessly portrayed and the picture is perfect for the entire family. Played week of December 26.—H. Ulman, Ulman's, New and Delmar Theatres, Salisbury, Md. General patronage.

Universal

DARK RAPTURE: Mr. and Mrs. Ardmand Denis, Native Cast—Nothing but good can be said about this fine feature. My patrons went out of their way to tell me how much they enjoyed this interesting feature. The photography, the commentator in this show are very good and I would advise you to play it by all means. Running time, 79 minutes.—A. E. Eliasen, Rialto Theatre, Paynesville, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

DRACULA (reissue): Bela Lugosi; FRANKENSTEIN (reissue): Boris Karloff—This does more business than some of the big specials. Had a few walkouts from those who couldn't take it. Running time, three hours. Played December 30-31.—Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

FRESHMAN YEAR: Dixie Dunbar, Ernest Truex, William Lundigan, Constance Moore—Here is a picture with no stars that seemed to please all who saw it. A very clever little college musical with a lot of young talent that will go places with a little more seasoning. Swell picture for the audiences but no box office, as there are no stars to draw in the patrons. Running time, 68 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

MISSING GUEST, THE: Paul Kelly, Constance Moore, William Lundigan—Simple thriller and it kept everyone happy, so it served its purpose okay. Played December 11-12.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

RAGE OF PARIS, THE: Danielle Darrieux, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Mischa Auer, Helen Broderick, Louis Hayward—Although this picture is by no means an elaborate production, it is nevertheless entertaining. It introduces that French beauty, Danielle Darrieux, to the American public, and from the manner in which she handles her role it appears as though she is destined to go places in a big way. The picture contains plenty of humor, although it does become a bit "slapstickish" at times. We shall be looking forward to Danielle's next vehicle with interest, so here's hoping Universal takes advantage of her acting ability and places her in a real honest to goodness story, one that will excel "The Rage of Paris" a thousand fold. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 14.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

RAGE OF PARIS, THE: Danielle Darrieux, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Mischa Auer, Helen Broderick, Louis Hayward—Went back and picked this comedy and it went over fine with the audiences. If the balance of Miss Darrieux films are as good as this one, she is a real box office find. An excellent comedy enjoyed by all. Running time, 78 minutes.—A. J. Inks, Crystal Theatre, Ligonier, Ind. Small town patronage.

THAT CERTAIN AGE: Deanna Durbin, Jackie Cooper, Melvyn Douglas, Irene Rich, John Halliday—Nice entertainment. No sell-out business but above average business. Running time, 101 minutes.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

THAT CERTAIN AGE: Deanna Durbin, Melvyn Douglas, Jackie Cooper, Irene Rich, John Halliday, Nancy Carroll—We can't seem to sell this little lady like Universal thinks she should be sold, so we have decided the best thing to do is lay off. We gave this a good plug, gave it our best playing time, played up the first crush angle, and then didn't do anymore than just average business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

YOUTH TAKES A FLING: Joel McCrea, Andrea Leeds, Dorothea Kent, Frank Jenks—Real good fun. Most any audience should enjoy this. About average intake. Played December 28-29.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

YOUTH TAKES A FLING: Joel McCrea, Andrea Leeds, Dorothea Kent, Frank Jenks—A very pleasing picture. It gave satisfaction but was not enthusiastically received. Well acted, produced and recorded. Frank Jenks and Dorothea Kent made a hit. Running time, 79 minutes. Played December 4-5.—Pearl C. Wisch, Grand Theatre, Mohall, N. D. Small town patronage.

Warner Brothers

BLONDES AT WORK: Barton MacLane, Glenda Farrell—Good program picture. Running time, 63 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

DAWN PATROL: Errol Flynn, David Niven, Donald Crisp, Basil Rathbone—It's swell at the box office and will please all. Another good box office show that is a pleasure to run. Put this on the "A" time and go to town. Played January 1-2.—Warren L. Weber, Ritz Theatre, Stafford, Kansas. General patronage.

DEVIL'S ISLAND: Boris Karloff, Nedda Harrigan —Action from beginning to end as well as action in the box office. Just the type of picture for the small town week end.—A. T. Mullen, Park Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

FOUR'S A CROWD: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland, Rosalind Russell, Patric Knowles—A screwy show that done business on New Years. Running time, 85 minutes. Played, January 1-2-3.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

FOUR'S A CROWD: Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland, Rosalind Russell, Patric Knowles—Good comedy to good business. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HEART OF THE NORTH: Dick Foran, Gale Page, Gloria Dickson, Allen Jenkins—A very good picture; photography in color is very good, especially the scenery, which is wonderful. Drew almost double average Sunday-Monday business. Action for the men, romance for the ladies. Pleased everyone. A natural for the small town.—A. T. Mullen, Park Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE MISS THOROUGHBRED: Ann Sheridan, John Litel, Frank McHugh, Janet Chapman—Good little show. Pleased the 15 people who came. Business terrible. Absolutely no business. Running time, 59 minutes. Played December 27.—Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn.. Rural and small town patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND BEHAVE: Wayne Morris, Priscilla Lane, John Litel—Pretty good but not as good as we expected. Running time, 71 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

OVER THE WALL: Dick Foran, June Travis, John Litel, Dick Purcell—Pretty weak. Ran "Crime School" awhile back and after seeing that, this one isn't much. No kicks; no patrons. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 24.—Ray S. Hanson, Fox Theatre, Fertile, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

PENROD AND HIS TWIN BROTHER: Billy and Bobby Mauch, Frank Craven, Spring Byington—Fine kid picture. Seems like all in this series are too much alike in story. Running time, 63 minutes.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

SISTERS, THE: Bette Davis, Errol Flynn, Anita Louise, Jane Bryan, Dick Foran, Ian Hunter—Was great. Is sure a Sunday show. Big. By all means put on a Sunday. Pleased 100%.—A. H. Records, Majestic Theatre, Hebron, Neb. General patronage.

VALLEY OF THE GIANTS: Wayne Morris, Claire Trevor, John Litel, Charles Bickford, Alan Hale—Another swell out-of-door action picture from the No. one company. The scenery and the color was beautiful. Alan Hale deserves a lot of credit. His acting and fighting sure helped the picture go over in a big way.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

VALLEY OF THE GIANTS: Wayne Morris, Claire Trevor, John Litel, Charles Bickford, Alan Hale—Excellent. Color superb. Good box office. Played December 16-17.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Paramount

BESIDES A MOONLIT STREAM: Screen Songs—A good band and a good soloist, but my people just won't sing with the bouncing ball and that makes these tiresome.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TANNHAUSER: Paragraphics—One of the finest orchestra shorts I have ever seen, but most of the audience walked out on it to smoke until it was finished. Pulled it on second show and had the operator run it for us after the show. Maybe I have a touch of the highbrow in me.—A. B. Jefferis, Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

WIN, PLACE AND SHOW: Grantland Rice Sportlights—A good sport reel on horse racing and worth a spot on your time.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CHRIS COLUMBO: Terry-Toons—Pretty good cartoon.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FASHION FORECASTS (Winter Styles): Fashions—Where did you get all those beautiful girls? The only objection to this subject was the fact that so many pretty girls passed across the screen we couldn't see enough of each one. ISLE OF PINGO PONGO: Merrie Melodies—"Merrie Melodies" comes through with a good one again. Lots of fun and good musical accompaniment. Probably the funniest "Merrie Melody" ever shown here. Great for adults and children alike. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Recreation, Prison Theatre, State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

OUT WHERE THE STARS BEGIN: Broadway Brevities—A musical which should have been much better. Good music, singing and dancing was offset by a poor plot and unintelligible dialogue. Excellent color heightens the effect of this short, and although it could have been better, is quite pleasing and should be an added attraction to any program. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. A. Reynolds, Director of Education and Recreation, New Jersey State Prison, Trenton, N. J. Prison patronage.

PICTORIAL REVUE: No. 6—A widely divergent variety yet three very interesting subjects in this short. First scenes show the intelligentsia of the horse kingdom going through their paces. RAINBOW'S END: Broadway Brevities—A very good short. Running time, 22 minutes.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. Rural patronage.

Serial

Columbia

GREAT ADVENTURES OF WILD BILL HICKOK: Gordon Elliott, Kermit Maynard—This series has quite a following and it doesn't look so amateurish as the other Columbia serials. I can't quite make my kids believe there are any mountains in Abilene and that shows up on nearly every episode.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Between shows, there is a trailer announcing the next picture, "They Made Me a Criminal." I defy you to look at it and not get a thrill out of the performance of John Garfield. This trailer is no longer than the ordinary one, and Garfield doesn't occupy all of it. But the impression he makes is indelible. Nine out of ten actors won't establish that much authority in a full-length feature. Unless that trailer is a bald-faced hoax, Garfield's second movie performance will eclipse his widely-acclaimed first without trying.

Did you ever hear a critic rave about a Trailer? This one did! He's famous Archer Winston of the N. Y. Evening Post.

New York Urges Exhibitors to Eliminate Games

Following the many local and state statutes already enforced against chance games, and the many local and state court decisions rendering the practice illegal, exhibitors in New York City, largest theatre territory of the country, this week led to serious consideration of elimination, prompted by the opening of a campaign by Paul Moss, license commissioner. Both New York independents and major circuits have been trying to get together for years on an agreement to abolish the games but faced the reluctance of the one group to act without seeing tangible action by the other.

Chance games received still further setbacks this week when Florida's courts held them illegal, and Quebec's courts acted similarly.

Chance games and cash and other giveaways now cost U. S. motion picture theatre owners an estimated $8,000,000 annually—$6,000,000 for prizes and $2,000,000 for advertising, expenses and cost of the games.

Estimate of the annual cost of chance games to theatres was made by Motion Picture Daily, which added that churches, lodges and clubs gave away another $2,000,000 a year.

Calls Theatres and Churches

In New York, License Commissioner Moss took the first decisive steps. With the cooperation of theatre owners of Staten Island, a borough of New York City, he called a meeting for this Friday of both the exhibitor and church interests of the borough. The exhibitors met last week and declared their willingness to help the commissioner end the practices, provided that other entertainment or social mediums using games, would also give up games, or provided the commissioner would act against them. Leading churchmen also met last week and agreed on the advisability of cooperating with the commissioner and the exhibitors.

In Florida, Bank Night was held illegal under the state's constitution, in a ruling handed down over the weekend by the state supreme court. It was termed a lottery, and the constitution forbids lotteries. Enforcement is left to local authorities.

In issuing the ruling, the court declared that the features of Bank Night making it a lottery were: awarding of prizes; their awarding by chance; the paying of a consideration, this be-the increased number of tickets bought. The court further recognized "the far reaching effect" its decision would have on theatre business in that state.

Illegal in Quebec Ruling

In Quebec, Canada, the same game was declared illegal in a case involving the Cambrai theatre. Sessions Court Judge Tremblay fined Charles Rioux, manager of the theatre, $10 for "illegally" conducting a lottery.

In Wisconsin, the state attorney general has issued a complaint against Bank Night, terming it a public nuisance, and a lottery. Expected is a test case, with either side able then to appeal to the state supreme court for a final decree.

In Milwaukee the announcement by A. D. Kvool, general manager of the Warner-Saxe Theatres, that the circuit would not participate in any elimination plan, dashed hopes of independent exhibitors for such an elimination plan in that city. In Massachusetts, Roy E. Heffner, Jr., was fined $100 by Judge John H. Sullivan in the fourth district court, in Middleboro.

After an absence of one year, vaudeville has returned to the stage of Shea's theatre, Toronto, which was looked upon as the home of big time vaudeville programs in Canada for the last 35 years. Vaudeville replaces one feature on the previous double bill policy and there is no change in the admission scale.

Sociological Film Study Sponsored By Carnegie Find

A sociological study of motion pictures, with particular emphasis on the backgrounds of the men who make films, is being made by Leo Calvin Rosten under a grant from the Carnegie Corporation of New York.

Mr. Rosten, Ph.D., University of Chicago, has engaged in a similar investigation of the Washington correspondents of leading newspapers, with an eye to a critical analysis of the attitudes taken by these men toward their work, and reflected in the news stories which come out of the capital. Harcourt, Brace and Company, New York publishing house, put out the book resulting from this survey in the fall of 1937. The material was gathered by Mr. Rosten over a period of more than a year, working on an $1800 field fellowship of the Social Science Research Council. Under the pen-name of Leonard Q. Ross, Dr. Rosten has written a series of humorous articles on life and learning in a night school, called "The Education of H*y*m*a*n K*a*p*l*a*n" for "The New Yorker," as well as having written for Major Pictures, Emanuel Cohen's producing company which released through Paramount until 1938 and had Mae West under contract.

The present study was proposed to the Carnegie Corporation last Spring by Dr. Rosten, and will take about a year and a half. Work began the first of the year. Offices have been established in the Hollywood Professional Building, with a staff including Philip E. Keller, formerly assistant professor of sociology at Stanford University; Ruth A. Inglis, M.A., former fellow at Bryn Mawr College, and Jean Lyle, of the Menninger Clinic. If the findings result in material suitable for book form, they will be published by Harcourt, Brace, which in the spring is bringing out a novel of Dr. Rosten's, about a foreign correspondent, called "Dateline: Europe."

Having no connection with the late William Harrison Short's Mortion Picture Research Council, which conducted a similar film studio in 1927, Dr. Rosten's study, operating under the name of the Motion Picture Research Project, has an advisory board consisting of Robert S. Lynd, professor at Columbia University and author of "Middletown"; Herbert Blumer, professor of sociology at the University of Chicago; Harold D. Lasswell, political scientist, and Louis Wirth, professor of the University of Chicago and associate editor of the American Journal of Sociology.

Under the terms of the Carnegie Corporation grant, Dr. Rosten has a free hand in his investigation, with the aid given him coming under the head of a "grant-in-aid." Of these, according to the report made by Charles Dollard, assistant to the president in this type of grant, the Corporation approved 60 of the 187 proposals received from Aug. 1st, 1937, to Aug. 1st, 1938. The grants voted ranged from $500 to $5,000. These were taken from the net income of the Corporation, which last year came to $4,748,895, to be devoted to any projects which might add to the total of the usable knowledge of the world, in accordance with the wish of Andrew Carnegie.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A-MIKE VOGEL, Chairman and Editor GERTRUDE MERRIAM, Associate Editor

"FIRST, LAST AND ALWAYS"

Well, folks, this is just how it happened. Here we set, mindin' our own business and waitin' for Spring. When, blam, along comes this letter from a Round Tabler down Kentucky way who has been asked for something to say about the 1939 Quigley Awards. . He sure do say something. In fact, the lad is about four times madder than a wax dog in a furnace. It seems he has been trying to win a Plaque for years and, not as yet successful, takes it out on your feeble ole Chairman by writing he has "lost all interest in your publication and the Round Table".

The member is being just a bit childish, don't you think? He should know by now that the Judging Committee votes the Plaques; that we here have nothing at all to do with the final selections.

Now, let's not allow the Quigley Awards to run away with us. The primary purpose of your Round Table, as we all know and agree, is to act as a clearing house for advertising, publicity and exploitation ideas proven worthwhile at the boxoffice and reported here by interested members for the benefit of others. Come hell or high water, just as long as there is a sufficient number of theatremen who think well enough of this institution to contribute to its support in the manner indicated, your Round Table will continue to hold its important place in showbusiness, Awards or no.

We find particular reason to impress this upon the membership on the eve of the 1939 Quigley Competitions. We stress it to confirm that this department does not function by reason of competition for prizes. So let there not be even one theatreman who runs himself into nervous exhaustion in pursuit of Awards recognition.

Of course the Competitions have long played a very important part in bringing long-deferred recognition to the man in the field. The project has won him promotion, salary rises, bonuses and other advantages he might not have been able to accomplish without the backing of the Competitions. It is also true that the Awards have honestly won their high position into the regard of the industry's top names in all branches as a definite incentive for better grosses.

Surely, we want every theatreman, everywhere, to compete for the Awards. But not at the expense of these pages.

First last and always, your Round Table is a clearing house for boxoffice exploitations. It is not a premium house for prizes.

THAT'S ONE WAY OF GETTING IT

The way Ernie Emerling tells about it, Round Tabler Jack Simons, from Hartford, was discussing his "Jesse James" campaign over long-distance with Oscar Doob, in the home office. "Go over and see Julian Tuthill and if he doesn't use a story, pull a gun on him," kidded the Loew's Theatres ad head. Simons took the advice literally. He donned sombrero and mask, and with gun in hand approached the Hartford Times dramatic critic. It was a laugh, of course. But, in addition, the gag broke in Tuthill's widely read daily column with ample mention of the date.

There are different ways of landing valuable publicity breaks outside of the routine channels. Quick-thinkers like Simons show how it is being done.

Feeling justifiably proud of his lobby setpiece for "Kentucky" at the Schine Kentucky Theatre, Lexington, Ky., is Manager Wally Allen. Pasted to flittered background were photos of the premiere in Hollywood which Gov. "Happy" Chandler, Mayor and other celebrities attended. Regular "hollywood" premiere was given the picture in Lexington.

Parade of local boys clubs was held, each carrying properly imprinted banners marched to theatre opening day and other street bally consisted of man wearing gas mask who covered main streets. Through the courtesy of the Harrisburg Telegraph, enlarged photo of J. Duke Football Team Visits MGM Studios

A. L. Burks, MGM exploiteer, through Noble Arnold, manager of the New Center Theatre, Durham, N. C., contacted Coach Wallace Wade of the Duke football team, which recently played the University of Southern California in the Rose Bowl and prevailed on Coach Wade to make an exclusive visit with his team to the MGM's studios. Burks supplied most of the newspapers in North and South Carolina with mats, publicity stories and photos on this exploitation scoop and they were widely used.

Promotes Co-op Ad

Manager F. B. Schlax, Strand Theatre, Oshkosh, Wis., credits his assistant, Robert Frisbie, with the promotion of a novel full column co-op ad on "The Citadel." Top carried cut of Robert Donat and Rosalind Russell followed by playdates. Outstanding part of the ad was that each merchants' ad stood out with an oversized letter running into the copy, but which also spelled out the title perpendicularly.

Trading Post Days Launched for "Fight"

In addition to the stage coach and locomotive race reported here recently as staged by Grace Fisher at the Cumberland Theatre, Cumberland, Md., for "Stand Up and Fight," other activities are now reported which include cooperation of Mayor Koon, who declared "trading post days." Costumes were sent on from the MGM Studios and were worn by local celebrities who participated in the race by riding in the old conveyances.

For a reported first time in the history of Cumberland, school was dismissed and city offices closed for a stunt with a commercial tiein, and to witness the presentation of a silver cup by Mayor Koon to the winner. Thirty-five merchants cooperated in securing spot announcements two days ahead and during run and night ahead there was a special 15-minute program over WBTO with His Honor the Mayor extending greetings. Station also carried an on-the-spot running description of the race.

Campaign was put over by Carlton Duffus, MGM territorial exploiteer with the cooperation of William R. Ferguson, of the Eastern Home Office.

Blind Date Contest Run by Erickson

Tying into the theme of "Brother Rat," Everett R. Erickson, Ogden Theatre, Chicago, planted a blind date contest one week ahead of paper. Asking such questions as "Should girls accept blind dates," "I married by blind date and why," and "My most amusing experience with a blind date was," theatreman offered guest tickets for best answers submitted.

Pennants were strung from the roof to canopy, giving the effect of military discipline, etc., advertising the picture. Two weeks ahead envelopes were distributed to patrons inside which message was printed "Just a reminder to phone your best girl (or boy) friend and make a date to see," etc., etc.

"Ferdinand" Tours Interstate Houses

Hooking in with a Texas State Network News goodwill flight to 22 cities, Mrs. Besa Short, head of the Interstate Theatres short subject department, has arranged to have a miniature of "Ferdinand the Bull" taken on tour to be received by mayors and other leading citizens.

The original miniature of "Ferdinand" was borrowed from the Disney Studios by Mrs. Short and was a special guest on the Gulf Oil Corporation plane which toured the Texas cities. Publicity at various stops was hooked up with the showing of the short at Interstate theatres. East local TSN station broadcast the ceremonies in the respective cities.

Tour was under the direction of Gail Northe, TSN director of women's activities, who presented the Ferdinand model to some local celebrity at each stop. Cities visited on the tour included Dallas, Sherman, Paris, Texarkana, Longview, Tyler, Corsicana, Waco, Temple, Austin, Houston, Beaumont, Galveston, Corpus Christi, Weslaco, San Antonio, San Angelo, Abilene, Big Springs, Lubbock and Amarillo.

Stores and Schools Cooperate On "Ballerina" in Baltimore

Important breaks of feature stories and art layouts in the local press marked the comprehensive advance campaign put on by Manager Maxwell Weinberg and Philip Gerard for the hold-over run on "Ballerina" at the Little Theatre, Baltimore. The showmen created further publicity for the picture, released by Arthur Mayer and Joe Burstyn, by obtaining cooperation of three leading department stores for window tieins on ballet slippers and perfumes named for the title. Tieup newspaper ads featuring star of the picture were also obtained.

Local dancing teachers worked on the date by publicizing the film at school sessions and each child attending the picture received an autographed photo of the star. It so happened that a local ballet teacher had been instructor for many of the dancers appearing in the picture, this was seized upon for newspaper interviews. The ballet master also was promoted to address dance groups and drama societies at local colleges on the merits of the film.

Ducks Lay Eggs For Sweet Charity

To think of eggs is to think of hens and to think of duck eggs is to think of Donald. At least that was the reasoning of Manager Nelson at the Plaza Theatre, Wellington, New Zealand who recently played "The Fox Hunt". Contacting Radio Station 2ZB, Nelson planted a contest whereby children's matinee was held, admission being a duck egg. To child bringing in largest egg, a giant Donald Duck doll was presented.

Contest was broadcast over kid program, advertised in theatre and local dailies, and it is reported that crates of eggs were donated, these later being turned over to local charities.

Entrants Prepare Exploitations of Individual Ideas for New Quigley Awards Starting on Feb. 1st; Changes Are Called Fairest Test of Showmanship

by A-MIKE VOGEL

The coming Wednesday is to be lettered in red on the theatreman's calendar. For that's the Big Day in the 1939 Quigley Awards. Feb. 1 marks the inauguration of the new form of theatre competition that has won record-breaking praise and endorsement from home office and field.

Since the Awards are now to be voted for the best individual ideas instead of complete campaigns, as previously, important opinion is unanimous that the changes in judging will return an unprecedented number of entries. There is every reason to believe that entrants will include those who did not find reason to participate in previous years of the Quigley Competitions.

As stated in last week's announcement, the Awards voted for the best single stunts, tie-ins, etc., will stress the "meat" of the campaign. This "meat" may be most anything in the way of exploitation, advertising and publicity. It might be an unusual window display, a space-grabbing newspaper contest, front page story, or series of stories, distinctive ad or series of ads, sock street stunt or bally, artistic lobby setpiece, front, or what have you.

Preliminary Contests Approved

The Preliminary Contests, adopted this year, have also won wide acclaim, as has the elimination of the deadline periods and last year's classifications. Theatremen are strong for the idea of competing against each other in two-week contests which comprise the Preliminary periods. From all material received at Round Table each two weeks, will be selected the three best single exploitations, whatever they may be. Theatremen entering this material will be appointed "Fortnighters" which in turn makes them eligible for the usual Quarterly Awards plus the designation of Quartermaster. From winning entries in the Fortnight periods will be voted the Quarterly Quigley Plaques.

Though individual ideas are stressed in the Awards, entrants who prefer to send in complete campaigns may do so and from these campaigns will be selected worthy single ideas for judging in the preliminary contests.

On following pages are further comments from industry leaders who have accepted appointment to the 1939 Judging Committee. Next week's issue will feature statements from Round Tablers and other theatremen.

Remember, the first "Fortnighters" will be selected from exploitations received no later than noon of Monday, Feb. 13. Make sure your entry is among them.

Rules for the Quigley Awards

Competitions begin February 1.

Awards will be voted on single exploitations and not on complete campaigns as formerly. This includes goodwill and institutional ideas as well as those on pictures.

Each Quarter will be divided into two-week preliminary contests.

*

Winners in each preliminary will be appointed Fortnighters.

Entries of Fortnighters in each Quarter will be judged for the Quigley Quarterly Plaques.

Quarterly Plaque Winners will be appointed Quartermasters.

Quartermasters appointed in each Quarter will compete for the annual Grand Awards.

Additional distinctions and Honorable Mention Sheepskin Certificates will be awarded in each Quarter.

First Quarter ends March 30, remaining Three Quarters as last year.

There will be no classifications of population or situation. Everyone starts from scratch.

Every theatreman everywhere is eligible to compete.

All product is eligible — features, shorts, serials. Also stage shows, amateur presentations, etc.

More than one idea may be included in one entry but Preliminary Awards will be voted for best individual idea.

No fancy entries are necessary. With the usual "evidence", submit brief description and "reasons why" an entry should be considered.

There are no more deadlines. All exploitations will be entered in the Fortnightly competition underway on date they are received.

MORE JUDGES ACCEPT APPOINTMENT

WILLIAM F. RODGERS
General Sales Manager
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures

Thank you for your letter of January 10th, inviting me to join the committee in judging the 1939 Quigley Awards for 1938.

I would like to say that I believe your sponsoring awards for showmanship serves as a stimulant to all showmen throughout the country. It is really a commendable undertaking.

LEON NETTER
Vice-President
Paramount Theatres Service Corp.

Replying to your letter of the 12th inst., I would consider it an honor to act as a member of your Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards. You can call upon me at any time.

J. J. O'CONNOR
Vice-President and General Manager, RKO Theatres

In reply to your letter of January 10th, I will be pleased to cooperate by serving on the committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

W. RAY JOHNSTON
President
Monogram Pictures Corp.

I am happy to accept your kind offer to be a member of the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

The very fact that after six years showmen recognize the great value of this competition is proof that it is a definite contribution to the progress of our industry.

I congratulate you on your success with this admirable project.

H. M. ADDISON
Division Manager
Loew's Northeastern Division of Theatres

I am very happy indeed to serve as one of the judges for the Quigley Awards for 1939.

Naturally I am, like many others, firm in the conviction that these awards inspire the ultimate in showmanship; create the foundation for stability, competence and confidence; create new and profitable ideas in advertising and exploitation, ingredients that blend into a healthy tonic, which taken properly must necessarily reflect advantageously at the box-office.

ARTHUR FRUDENFELD
Divisional Director
RKO Theatres
Cincinnati, Ohio

My thanks for again including me in the list of judges for the 1939 Quigley Award, an honor which I am most pleased to accept.

You are to be congratulated on the continuation of these Awards, and the fact that 1939 is to be the sixth successive year of these theatre competitions sponsored by the Managers' Round Table is proof of the interest that this competition has aroused, and with each succeeding year, attracting more entrants with not only many applications of tried and true stunts, but a host of original exploitation ideas as well.

Theatremen Win Acclaim By Project, Says Einfeld

I am glad to serve on the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards. These Awards are more and more becoming a definite constructive force in our industry.

Before their inception, the man in the field had but little chance of recognition for his efforts in devising important ticket-selling campaigns. Now, through this arrangement, he receives the wide acclaim which his enterprise and skill merit.

Nothing but good for the entire industry can result from such awards. Through encouraging the men in exhibition, they are bound to substantially stimulate grosses. The competition which they provoke injects a healthy ingredient in our business.—S. CHARLES EINFELD, Director of Advertising and Publicity, Warner Brothers Pictures.

R. B. WILBY
President, Wilby-Kincey Service Corp.
Atlanta, Ga.

I will be glad to serve on the Judging Committee for your 1939 Quigley Awards, at such times as I may be in New York when the Awards are given.

I am especially glad to note that you have changed from a complete campaign to one single advertising stunt. I think this is going to put the competition on a much fairer basis because many of the smaller theatres have not the facilities for complete campaigns, where they have practically an equal opportunity so far as single exploitation is concerned.

I think it is self-evident that the Quigley Awards have done much to encourage good exploitation in the theatre.

EDWARD GOLDEN
Vice-President
Monogram Pictures Corp.

I wish to take this opportunity to accept with a great deal of pleasure the appointment to serve on the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

It is very gratifying to record yearly my sentiments toward these awards, and to note the growing incentive they provide for the man in the field which is so admirably reflected in the stimulation of box office grosses.

HARRY E. LONG
Division Manager
Loew's Cleveland Division of Theatres

It is indeed a pleasure to act on the judging committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards. I think your idea this year of making awards on outstanding stunts is meritorious.

ARTHUR L. MAYER
Exhibitor and Importer of Foreign Films
Rialto Theatre, New York City

Thanks for the invitation to again act as one of the judges for the Quigley Awards.

I have written to you frequently in past years telling you how valuable this competition seemed to me. In a rapidly changing world, this is one of the few things about which I see no reason to change my opinion.

It is a pleasure to accept your invitation and to wish you success both this year and for many years to come.

FURTHER PRAISE FOR NEW POLICY

Manta-men Compensated For Awards Recognition

Will be pleased to accept my appointment to the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

Regarding your new setup for the 1939 Competitions, believe it to be a very good one, because it is a fact that most campaigns revolve about one main stunt or, as you say, single idea or promotion. Feel quite certain that our boys will contribute the results of their efforts, as they have done in the past.

The Quigley Awards Competition is a great business stimulator and a medium for bringing recognition on an industry-wide basis to the man "behind the gun" in theatre operation, the manager. I am sure that the winners have in all instances, if not immediately, sooner or later been compensated for their efforts either by promotion, where possible, or by increase in weekly salaries and, in some cases, with bonus. This has been the case in our circuit, without exception.—ALEX MANTA, President, Indiana-Illinois Theatres.

RICK RICKETSON

President
Fox Intermountain Theatres
Denver, Colo.

I deem it a great honor to be invited to accept appointment on the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

I believe the Quigley Awards have been a very constructive force in the past six years in stimulating showmanship. We need, as never before, a higher type of exploitation and advertising in our theatres. We need men who can develop ideas that will click at the box office, and there is nothing that fosters and encourages showmanship more than the rewarding of outstanding effort.

VINCENT R. McFAUL

President, Buffalo Theatres, Inc.

I will be very glad to again act as judge on the Quigley Awards Committee for 1939.

I agree with the thought that the awards should be on the basis of new ideas and promotions rather than on the campaigns put over during the period of the contest.

DAVID E. WESHNER

Zone Manager, Warner Theatres
Philadelphia, Pa.

While there are many gauges of man-power, the winner of a Quigley Award to my mind is a man to be thankful for, and invariably one who gets first consideration when any promotions are considered. I am sure this same consideration motivates every circuit executive when he makes his promotions from the ranks, and particularly when he engages an outside man. In the latter case, any new man who has figured prominently in your Awards would take precedence over anybody else.

Yours is a mighty constructive force in the industry and is particularly valuable to managers throughout the country in that it is a potent means of bringing them and their work to the attention of those executives in whose hands, to a great degree, the future of these managers is held.

It is with great pleasure I accept your invitation to the Committee for 1939.

HOWARD DIETZ

Director of Advertising and Publicity
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures

Thank you for your letter. I will be glad to serve on the Judging Committee for the Quigley Awards.

HARRY ARTHUR

Vice-President
Fanchon & Marco
St. Louis, Mo.

I will be very happy to accept your invitation to serve on the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards. I subscribe to the procedure of your awards as announced in your enclosure, and feel that it is an excellent method of determining the awards.

I know of no other single force in exhibition that is more potent in producing bigger box office returns than the exploitation and advertising effort of the managers in the field.

The Quigley Awards, with their genuine seat-selling ideas, serve a real need in this business by encouraging and stimulating the managers and exhibitors in merchandising their product and theatres.

W. G. VAN SCHMUS

Managing Director
Radio City Music Hall

It is a great pleasure to send you my acceptance of your cordial invitation to serve on the Judging Committee for the 1939 Awards.

You and your publication are making a splendid contribution to intelligent, sane and fruitful exploitation of motion pictures which will inevitably make its return in increased boxoffice return and prestige for the industry as a whole.

Your innovation this year is a worthy experiment and should bring interesting results, for perfection of detail in any campaign should make it just that much more potent.

E. L. ALPERSON

Vice-President in Charge of Sales and Distribution
Grand National Pictures

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter, inviting me to be one of the Judges on the Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards, sponsored by the Managers' Round Table of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Please be advised that I will be very happy to accept the appointment and can assure you of my fullest co-operation.

LYNN FARNOL

Director of Advertising and Publicity
United Artists Corp.

Thank you very much for your invitation to join the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards. I accept with pleasure.

Along with the great good these Awards do in encouraging initiative and enterprise and a quality of personal showmanship, they do us all a great service in focusing attention on the man in the field—his work, his understanding and position in the community, the importance of that viewpoint in contrast to what might be called a Hollywood, or a Broadway, or a trade viewpoint. In the Quigley Award, we find the expression of these things.

GREATEST AWARDS YEAR EXPECTED

JOHN JOSEPH

Director of Advertising and Publicity
Universal Pictures Company

I would be very happy to become a member of the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

I have always thought the Awards a swell idea because they bring at least a little recognition to the men in the field. In the final analysis, such men are really the ones who can make or break an attraction as far as advertising, publicity and exploitation are concerned. The ability of such men to appraise properly local conditions and local tastes in motion-picture-going determine the success or failure of many campaigns in many situations.

I have read carefully the plans for the 1939 contest and it seems to me that you have worked out an excellent plan.

LOU LIFTON

Director of Advertising and Publicity
Monogram Pictures Corp.

Thank you very much for appointing me to the judging committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards. I am most happy to accept and I wish to assure you of my desire to cooperate whenever called upon.

Showmen everywhere recognize the annual Quigley Awards as an influence that touches every phase of theatre management and exploitation.

JOHN NOLAN

Comerford-Publix Theatres, Scranton, Pa.

I will be again honored to serve on your Judges Committee and hope this year to give it more time than I have.

RALPH ROLAN

Sales and Advertising Executive
RKO Radio Pictures

It is with a great deal of pleasure that I accept your appointment to serve on the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

I am heartily in agreement with the idea behind the Awards this year. I believe it is even more important than the campaigns on the big pictures. The theatre that is consistently startling its clientele by intelligent promotion and display is one of the most necessary things in the industry. If the theatre is to be a definite, important part of its community it should certainly keep itself in the spotlight. Your new basis of competition for 1939 should aid materially in doing this.

LOUIS POLLOCK

Advertising Manager
Universal Pictures Co., Inc.

Many thanks for your invitation to me to serve on the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards. I accept, of course. I will be glad to comment for publication on the worth of the Awards in stimulating better grosses and in bringing recognition to the man in the field.

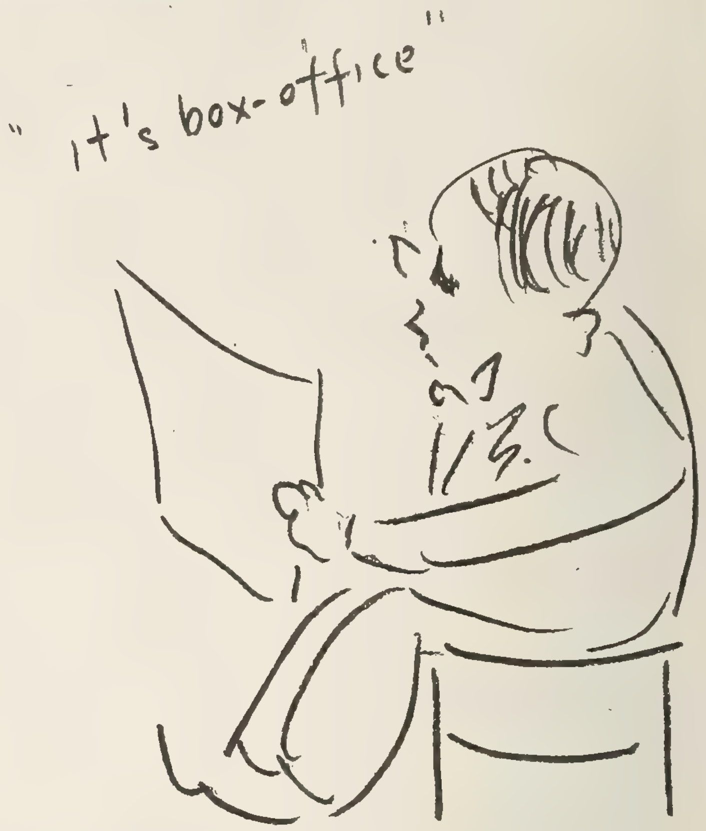
LOUIS FRISCH

Treasurer, Randforce Amusemant Corp.

In reply to your letter, please be advised that I will be more than glad to serve on the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

I was pleased to learn that you are having another Quigley Award for the year of 1939. It is my sincerest belief that these Awards stimulate the efforts of managers to create more outstanding publicity and tieups pertaining to motion pictures.

MEMO from
S. F. SEADLER



Judge Seadler of Round Table at work. Sure. Count me in.

Si Seadler, Advertising Manager, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, accepts appointment to the Quigley Awards Judging Committee, in his well-known cartoon manner.

GEORGE W. TRENDLE

President, United Detroit Theatres
Detroit, Mich.

Replying to your letter of January 17, I will be glad to serve as a member of the Judging Committee for the 1939 Quigley Awards.

Should my business trips at any time coincide with the activities of the committee in reviewing entries, I will be very glad to function.

AL ADAMS

Director of Advertising
Republic Pictures Corp.

I accept with thanks the invitation to act as a judge of the 1939 Quigley Awards. I am glad to see that the judging will be based on single ideas or promotions, rather than scatter-shot campaigns. You get far better results with a bomb-shell than with buck-shot.

I don't have to add to anything I've already told you about the Quigley Awards. They're like having an extra advertising-publicity-exploitation man in a theatre.

Finney; D. R. Hutton; G. L. Baxter; S. Robbins; B. B. Kent.

To Section A, various points of view are given. G. H. Payne says, "Although sound is created by or through physical means and has physical effect upon physical objects, it is not in itself a physical quantity. It exists in the form of extremely temporary vibrations."

L. Cimikoski says, "Sound is not a physical quantity to the extent it cannot be handled as we can handle a physical quantity. It may be considered either as a physical disturbance (waves) propagated through various media, or as the sensation produced by these disturbances (waves) where in contact in the drum of the ear."

G. E. Doe says, "That may, I think, be answered by saying sound is a physical quantity in that in order to be audible the waves by means of which it is transmitted must move physical objects [?]. Without such movement there would be no sound. The question is puzzling. Is not a thing that cannot exist without physical action itself, in the very nature of things, physical? Sound, as we hear it, consists of vibrations of physical matter tranformed into sound waves that move physical matter. But is not the air, or solid objects through which sound waves travel, physical? I am inclined to the view that sound might be considered as being or as not being a physical quantity, according to which view is taken."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 145

(A) What type of material absorbs sound, and in just what manner is absorption accomplished?

(B) What is an echo. Describe an echo and those factors that increase its loudness.

(C) What is reverberation? Explain its action and describe its effect. Name three possible ways in which it may be more or less controlled.

The cause of the confusion is the way we usually speak of sound. However, sound is a sensation. It is produced by physical energy—most commonly, by specific kinds of wave movements in the air which represent what we call sound energy.

(B) J. R. Prater replies, "Sound itself cannot be stored away for future use. However, sound can be recorded by 'harnessing' its power during the time that actual vibrations are occurring, and by using that power to create a permanent record of the sound vibrations in or on a suitable material, a record may be made which can be stored for reproduction at some future time. By using this record in a suitable apparatus and by furnishing a new source of power, a new sound can be produced which may be practically identical to that which was used to form the record.

"The actual work which sound is made to perform during the recording process is to activate the diaphragm of a microphone—that is, to cause this diaphragm to vibrate in exact relation to the frequency of the sound vibrations in the air. The vibrations thus created in the said diaphragm cause changes in an electrical current in the microphone circuit, in effect producing an alternating current which fluctuates in accordance with the sound vibrations. This current is too weak to operate a recording mechanism, but it can be used to operate the electrical valve (vacuum tube) at the input of an amplifier, which in turn produces a similar but stronger current. This process is repeated as many times as necessary from one tube or 'stage' of amplification to another, until finally the current is strong enough to operate the actual recording mechanism, which may be a disc record cutter, or any one of several types of film recording devices, such as a glow-tube, light valve, or galvanometer."

R. and K. Wells answer, "Answering the two questions in reverse, sound does perform actual work when it is recorded on a wax phonograph record, or at least sound waves do so, for the record is made by a needle moved by sound waves transformed into electric current or impulses. The needle is made to vibrate in exact accordance with the electric impulses, which impulses are controlled by the pitch and volume of waves set in motion in the air by sound. It is pretty difficult for us non-technical 'sticks' men to express our views clearly in such highly complicated matters."

I know that, but you have done well.

(C) L. Johnson expresses the matter thus: "Recording is the impression, by photographic or mechanical means, of work performed by sound. Reproduction is the restoration of that work in such manner that an effect similar to the original sound is transmitted to the atmosphere in audible form."

J. R. Prater says, "Recording is a process by means of which the energy of an original sound is employed to make a permanent record of that sound. Reproduction is a process in which a record of sound is supplied with energy and made to produce a new sound resembling, as exactly as possible, the original."

(D) More than one hundred expressed the same thought in different words: "The function of theatre sound equipment is to create from sound records sounds which as nearly as possible duplicate the original sounds recorded."

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1938-39 season. Asterisk (*) after title of feature denotes first appearance of picture in Release Chart.

NOTE: The totals for running time are the official figures announced by the home offices of the distributing companies.

When a production is reviewed in Hollywood, the running time is as officially given by the West Coast studio of the company at the time of the review, and this fact is denoted by an asterisk (*) immediately preceding the number. As soon as the home office has established the running time for national release, any change from the studio figure is made and the asterisk is removed.

Running times are subject to change according to local conditions. State or city censorship deletions may cause variations from the announced and published figures; repairs to the film may be another reason.

DELUSIONS OF GRANDEUR

Some remarks on the advertising of the motion picture

by TERRY RAMSAYE

THE first man who made a million dollars in the motion picture business bought a seat at the Metropolitan Opera. The next in line went in for emeralds and eight others for larger diamonds.

After that the gesture imposing consisted of page space in the Saturday Evening Post—the unapproached colossus of national publications, in the feature's natal years.

Incidental to that, however, for some years the magnates of the movies demonstrated their magnificence, or hope of it, in a shade more intimate fashion by hurling double trucks in the picture section of the New York Morning Telegraph at each other every Sunday morning. Do not get confused, that had nothing to do with improving the breed, it was just a paper they all read. The social status of the race horse at that time was at low ebb. Relevancy to the box office was not wide or acute.

That was, as years are counted in our world of the screen, a very long time ago.

Some of these advertisers had themselves to sell. Many of them had stock to sell.

That was, as years are counted in this world of the screen, long ago.

All of them had motion pictures to sell, but that was a very different matter being handled in a very different manner. They were not very clear, confidentially, about what caused what, but they were getting a lot of action, one way or another, and they saw their names and their company names in what seemed to be high places. They were, in a direct fashion obscured only by the devious processes of bookkeeping, if any, buying evidence of what they had already attained.

THAT was not quite as much of a total loss as this casual recording might be taken to indicate. It helped dominant personalities of ability to dominate. It helped make "down town" know that the motion picture was an industry. It cost a lot, but it was worth something—to some.

The picture got dreadfully confused, between kudos and merchandising, with entirely understandable justifications. Beginning with the Chicago Tribune's parallel page-and-screen presentations of serials beginning with the "Adventures of Kathleen," through to and including the ill-fated "Gloria's Romance," there was a lot of intertwining of newspaper circulation selling and picture merchandising. The newspapers went to big space, their own—and to sell papers. The early movement included such pace makers as the New York World and the publications of Mr. Norman E. Mack of Buffalo. It is not to be wondered that the novice magnates of the industry of the motion picture could hardly tell selling from telling. The publishers were not the sort to tell them, either. The newspapers were, of course, selling circulation to the masses with movie-lure, and with the movies contributing. This had nothing to do with the very different process of using newspaper space to sell seats, for a show at a place and time.

Exhibitors in that time were buying first "film service" and then presently "program," which was the same thing. In a fashion they still do—because there are fifty-two weeks in every year, no matter how few or many the hits.

The newspaper and magazine advertising was the frosting on the film cake. It helped to sell exhibitors, it helped to decoy players, it helped to sell stock, it helped to ease bank loans, it also made the presidents and vice-presidents mentioned feel better.

That is how the motion picture became what is called "a national advertiser."

THUMBING the pages of a stack of what are known as "national media," otherwise a pile of magazines, this grey winter's day, one becomes aware of a chorus of complaint. It seems that nearly everyone who writes of the screen elects to draw attention by vociferation of a notion of where-in and how the motion picture is all wrong. Just parenthetically it may be observed that much of the copy appears to be sold by members of the production community of Hollywood, which not only warms the vipers but fattens them. Fat is unbecoming to a viper.

Anyway, speaking of national media, one comes across the current issue of Time, the bellwether of the printed triumvirate of Time, Fortune and Life, and that excited and exciting unicorn of screen journalism called "The March of Time," in the course of which said Time in the screen department under the title of "The New Pictures" appears:

"In 1938, foreign pictures, by and large, were better than Hollywood pictures. . . ."

That is a considerably sweeping statement.

"Better," one might ask, "better for whom?" or by special permission from Harvard "who?"

Mayhap that represents the preference of the cinema editor of Time, and maybe, if he is doing a job, the preference of his audience. If so, what of it? "Snow White" is still the picture of the year, Shirley Temple is still the number one box office draw.

The attitude and observations of the cinema editor of Time rather automatically remind one of the observations of Mr. Howard Dietz, speaking on a lecture course at the New School for Social Research the other night, when he indicated that it was possible that some of the esoteric tastes of the critics could be traced to their boredom at looking at a lot of pictures. Jobs are like that, to be sure. They have routine and monotony, and much looking maketh a tired critic, which is, however, not sufficient excuse for fighting the job. Tea tasters

Divorcement Test

The supreme court will review the suit attacking the constitutionality of the North Dakota law requiring separation of disertbution and exhibition interests, a ruling having been made this week that the court had "probable jurisdiction." The hearings will be followed with interest by the industry which just now is watching the Government suit in equity and internal efforts toward trade practice regulation, proposals for which are in the process of revision.

The ruling is reported on page 13 and trade practice news is on page 12.

Investigator

The British Board of Trade this week appointed Russell Kettle as inspector to investigate the affairs of Gaumont British. The appointment consolidates reiterated and prolonged appeals on the part of Gaumont British shareholders but is apparently at variance with a statement sent to the House of Commons at the last session that it had been asked by the shareholders to suspend any investigation.

Bars Radio Appearance

Darryl F. Zanuck, in charge of Twentieth Century-Fox Production, took action this week to limit the radio appearances of film stars.

"Heeding the protests and advice of exhibitors about the excessive appearances of film stars on radio programs," said an announcement of the New York headquarters, "Darryl Zanuck in Hollywood Wednesday made the first move of compliance by withdrawing Tyrone Power, one of the company's outstanding stars, from further broadcasts. In an agreement with Power's sponsors (Woodbury's soap), the star will terminate his program after next Sunday's broadcast.

" 'We have no quarrel with radio,' said Mr. Zanuck, 'but there is great validity in the insistence of exhibitors who contend that they are severely injured because the air lanes are so crowded with screen personalities. The screen and radio can continue to help each other, when they cooperate for mutual benefit, but the situation today is such that unless stern measures are taken both must suffer.' "

Money from Movies

Since 1926, at which time the first of three basic agreements with film producers on sale of plays was signed, $11,199,566 has been paid to dramatists for the film rights to their plays, according to George Middleton, past president of the Dramatists' Guild, $1,440,650 of which has been paid since 1936, when the third agreement was signed. Mr. Middleton also believes that television will create an entirely new market for the dramatist, although the Guild has not been able to prevent television rights from being included in the sale of film rights.

Negotiations between the Guild and the motion picture industry, as represented by J. Robert Rubin of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Jake Wilk of Warner Brothers, for the return of Hollywood backing to the Broadway stage, have reached the stage where the first draft contracts are being drawn up by Sidney Fleisher, attorney for the Guild. It is believed that a full agreement may be reached within the next fortnight, with the final plan then subject to a vote of all stage managers, and to 30 days notice to the membership of the Guild.

get jaded, but they do not try to change the national appetite. Their business is to serve it.

Tea, of course, is merchandise, like motor cars and cosmetics and groceries, like department store bargains, baseball, fights and travel tours. Motion Pictures are, one must discover, different. The free press gets free only in sectors. No newspaper has yet printed what really happened to a certain son of a merchant prince of Chicago, no department store ever has an accident or loses a judgment to a customer, but if any critic or columnist takes a misliking to a screen player in a part it is a national, screaming outrage. If any Buick was less than perfect, if any cake of Ivory ever sank, we never read about it. But any time, any day, we can read that most any motion picture is a total loss, that Hollywood is a total loss, that its picture makers do not know their art from their elbows—all on the authority of persons who never made anything but a deadline.

To the public press the motion picture is a source of both important circulation making copy and of remunerative sale of advertising space, a picture most unlike that which obtains in the relations of the press and sports.

IN the year 1938, as recorded in the Herald's newspages last week, five motion picture companies bought a total of $1,087,615 in space in the national magazines. For four of them this was an increase between 1935 and 1938 of about three hundred percent. In the same period Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, which had splashed $452,149 in '35, marched down the four years in diminuendo to $153,899 in '38, the low figure among the advertising film companies. An examination of the curves of performance for the companies concerned for the period covered do not appear to give evidence of a very intimate relation between the magazine figures and the annual grosses. While Mr. Dietz was cutting-down his contemporaries were cutting-up.

Reasons can be found for some of the eccentric patterns of operation involved, and they pertain considerably more to the selling of advertising than the selling of pictures.

The reasons are as diverse as "he's a jolly good fellow" and the existence of interlocking interest between advertising agencies and motion picture finance. Those factors have nothing to do with the business of giving the amusement seeking public its money's worth of a good time at the box office.

The use of national media began tentatively in 1914. Experience since then has shown, with considerable conclusiveness, that pictures are sold only where they can be had, at a certain box office at a certain date and time. The necessity for close correlation between advertising and distribution of merchandise is an axiom among real merchandisers.

Let us assume that a powerful national medium has a circulation of, say, three millions, a reader attention of maybe fifteen millions. Suppose, extravagantly, that the advertising was so good that it gave those fifteen millions an overwhelming impulse to dash out and buy a seat to see a certain show. How many places could that be done? The answer is the print order, ranging from say 100 on mine run material to maybe 300 on a picture the distributor wants to sell before it reveals itself. It seems inevitable that the vast preponderance of those sold by the big national media have to be expected to carry their desire to buy over a considerable period—and in that period how many other advertisers are intervening with perhaps equal or stronger appeals?

No motion picture was ever really sold except at the box office. That is a job for showmanship—for which there is no substitute.

The Labor Front

Acting on petitions filed by the Screen Writers' Guild the National Labor Relations Board this week issued formal complaints against ten Hollywood studios charging violation of the Labor Relations Act in that, among other things, they have refused to recognize the Guild despite its certification as the collective bargaining agency for writers.

Further in the field of organized labor, the executive board of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, meeting in Miami, announced that full autonomy has been given the Hollywood studio unions.

Developments are reported on page 36.

Majors Lose Point

The motion for a bill of particulars made by the dependents in the anti-trust suit against the majors (with the exception of Twentieth Century-Fox) instituted by Harry Fried on September 28th last, has been denied by Judge Kirkpatrick in United States District Court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. Judge Kirkpatrick held that the complaint did not "require further clarification."

Mr. Fried operates the following theatres, all in Pennsylvania: the Anthony Wayne, Wayne; the Surburban, Ardmore; the Lawndale, Philadelphia, and the Seville, Bryn Mawr.

Time and the Feature

Definitely in mind is the making of a feature by the March of Time, newsreel affiliate of Henry Luce's Time, Inc., which controls Time, Life and Fortune magazines, as well. While the March of Time was off the air, recently, its radio staff worked on several drafts of a motion picture film scenario, with the basic idea centering upon some news event. Probably to be distributed through its present outlet, RKO, the feature, when a suitable approach is found for the medium, will be only the first, if it is a success. Louis de Rochemont, producer of the March of Time, pointed out that before any definite action can be taken, the completed plan would be submitted to Mr. Luce and the directors of the company.

Troubled Air Waves

Tentative plans were rumored in Washington this week for the new commission called for by the president to replace the present Federal Communications Commission whose administration of the radio broadcasting laws has been called inadequate. The blueprints call for a three man group to replace the seven members of the commission.

A strike of radio talent having been averted by a last minute action on the part of advertising agencies, the American Federation of Radio Actors and the American Association of Advertising Agencies began conferences in New York this week which are to last until an agrement is reached.

Both sides late Wednesday said the outlook for a settlement was bright.

Both stories are on page 43.

That Spanish Market

The newly recognized South American market again was in the news as two executives, in the foreign sales departments of United Artists and Universal Pictures, reported on the situation: on methods used to build business, on the negligible competition provided by Italian and German product, on the peculiar customs encountered by Americans "down there," on the production of Spanish-language films, on prospects for American films this year. Interviewed were J. H. Seidelman, foreign sales manager for Universal, who sailed this week on the SS Gripsholm for a 56-day cruise during which he will show, at the chief ports of call, a three-reel trailer in the Spanish language, detailing current Universal product; and Paul Wir, Central American manager for United Artists, who was in New York for conferences with home office executives.

Griffis Forecasts

Between 30,000 and 100,000 television receiving sets will be manufactured and sold in 1939, Stanton Griffis, chairman of the executive committee of Paramount Pictures, predicted at the opening of the annual conference of the National Board of Review Thursday at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York.

Mr. Griffis said television will bring the adaptation of old films to telecasting as well as new "specialty" pictures. "Our laboratories are already working along these lines," he said.

"For the exhibitor we see the televising of sports and other current events as an adjunct to his newsreel program. Television to the motion picture industry will mean the loss of no more business than has the development of 16 mm films."

Allan B. Dumont of the Dumont Laboratories, Paramount's television company, traced the technical advancement of television.

Screen Advertising

A bill was introduced in the state legislature in Wilmington, Del., on Wednesday by Senator Paul R. Renard, making it unlawful for theatres to display any advertising preview or trailor which would take more than three minutes during the period of one entire program, unless the proper notice thereof were first given to patrons by displaying signs and handbills.

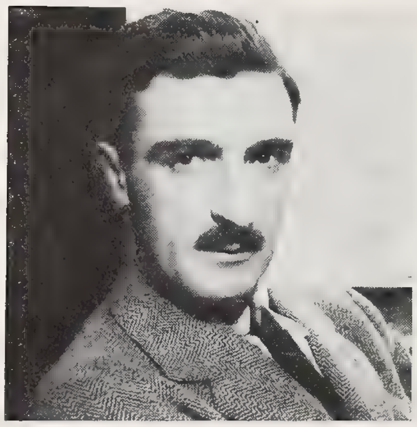
ALMOST a year in advance, W. R. Lynch, general manager of Paramount Enterprises, Inc., Florida circuit, signs for first run of "Gulliver's Travels," the industry's second full-length cartoon in color which is now in production at the Fleischer Studios in Miami. Watching execution of the contract for the showing next Christmas are Dave Fleischer, director of Fleischer Studios, and Oscar A. Morgan, Paramount southern division manager.

GARSON KANIN, right, youthful RKO Radio director, whose first three pictures, "A Man to Remember," "Next Time I Marry" and "The Great Man Votes," have brought him critical acclaim, has signed a new contract with RKO in Hollywood.



ALBERT MARGOLIES, left, for the last two years in charge of publicity for Gaumont British, has joined the United Artists publicity staff under Lynn Farnol, director of publicity and advertising.

KARL HOBLITZELLE, left, head of the Texas Interstate circuit, has been voted Dallas' most distinguished citizen and winner of the Linz award, given annually for outstanding civic accomplishment. The circuit operator was cited for his great philanthropies and particularly his charity on behalf of the German refugees.

PAUL WIR, right, manager in Panama for United Artists, in New York on a visit told an interviewer for Motion Picture Herald that the company is handling the greatest volume of business in its history in Central America and that the coming season would be profitable for all American companies in the field. He is quoted on page 42.

IRVING SHAPIRO, below, general sales manager of World Pictures, commenting on the box-office success of "Grand Illusion," points out that nationality is by no means part of the formula by which good pictures are and must be made. Convinced that those qualities which go to make a good film are mostly intangibles, he attributes the success of certain French pictures in part to the freedom allowed directors there, a policy toward which he thinks Hollywood is turning.

AN INTENSIVE effort to consolidate and make further gains in the South American market will be made by J. H. Seidelman, below, Universal foreign sales manager, who sailed this week to tour the territory. He outlines his hopes in an interview on page 42.

MPTOA URGES SPEED ON PROGRAM; KUYKENDALL ANALYZES PROPOSALS

Exhibitor Leader Argues Need for Conciliation Rather Than Arbitration Boards; Revision of Tentative Draft of Code

While waiting for the major distributors' committee on self-regulation to bring in a new trade practice program as rewritten by their lawyers, Edward L. Kuykendall, president, for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, ventured on Tuesday, into a 4,465-word analysis of the subject, the sum and substance of which was the conclusion that elastic "conciliation" boards and not the more formal system of "arbitration" is needed for enforcing the program when enacted and that the MPTOA demands speed in effecting it.

Hopes Outlined

Mr. Kuykendall pointed out that the distributors now are rewriting the first tentative draft as a result of the distributor committee's recent conferences with MPTOA committeemen. "While no major changes in principle are expected in the revised distributor proposals," he said, "we do expect that the presentation of what the distributors intend to do, also how and when it will be done, will be greatly clarified, and a considerable number of the objectionable conditions, qualifications and reservations that tended to nullify the main proposals will be removed."

Pessimistically, however, Mr. Kuykendall said, "we are advised that it will take some time for the distributors to redraft these proposals and agree among themselves on the new revision."

Charging that the enforcement of self-regulation for distribution-exhibition has already been delayed too long, the MPTOA president reiterated the suggestion that a program be adopted, then tried out by making it effective immediately with later improvement "based on actual experience and necessities as we go along."

The general opinion prevails that there is little likelihood of the program being effected before the 1939-40 season, and with virtually all members of the distributors' committee still out of New York on Hollywood product and field sales matters, including some vacationing, there still is no telling when the majors and MPTOA representatives will meet on the revised pact.

Allied To Negotiate

Little or no trouble is expected, however, to arise from those conferences, but the situation with Allied States differs in that Allied, having rejected the original draft, is to negotiate on numerous phases of the program.

Reports this week were to the effect that the distributors are prepared to put the final draft into effect whether or not Allied approves it, but "every reasonable effort" is expected to be made during the next few weeks to effect an agreement with that organization. Meanwhile Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied, is expected to bring forth an Allied version of a program, matching that with the distributors' pact during personal discussion with the majors' lawyers.

WASHINGTON HEARS TRUST SUIT TALK

Reports persisted from Washington during the week that a statement of "quite some importance" concerning the Government's impending anti-trust suit against the majors might be forthcoming before the weekend from the Department of Justice. The Department, of course, refused to engage in any press conversations, and in New York distributor quarters, defendant representatives either were uninformd or unwilling to talk.

The reports, all apparently coming from Washington—where most of the open "unofficial" conversation has been heard on the subject—ranged all the way from the announcement of an agreement between the Department and defendants, with distributors agreeing not to expand their circuit holdings any further, to the possibility of the consummation of a consent decree. Modification of block-selling practices, at least partial divorcement of theatres and even the breaking up of the so-called Hollywood talent pool were the subjects of grape-vine discussion at the capital.

Distributors have insisted all along that they could not possibly enter into any consent decree based on the Government's demands in the suit.

Mr. Kuykendall's Tuesday statement deviated from its analysis of the contents of a program as if to answer Allied with the warning that, "If the trade practice program becomes tangled up with impractical theories and disputes over points on which no effective, practical solution is in sight, exhibitors are certain to lose all the benefits that can be secured on the problems that can be worked out here and now."

The exhibitor leader's statement said in part:

"Of the four main proposals advanced by MPTOA perhaps the most far reaching and, from that point of view, the most important is the proposal for the establishment of a local joint board and permanent facilities in the local distribution center for the organized systematic adjustment of complaints and disputes that are of such a nature that they necessarily must be adjusted on the merits of each separate complaint and with full knowledge of the particular situation.

"The other three main proposals advanced by MPTOA were for (1) an unconditional minimum option to cancel 20% of the feature pictures licensed in groups of ten or more, written into all contracts, (2) the complete elimination of the separate score charge, and (3) a simplified, shorter standard form of exhibition contract for optional use."

"The distributors," he said, "have substantially accepted these proposals, with numerous qualifications and conditions of their own," and the "quibbling language, technicalities and qualifications are being cleared up as the result of the subsequent negotiations."

Explaining the cancellation privilege, Mr. Kuykendall said that the majors would give to all exhibitors an option to cancel 20% of the feature pictures licensed on all contracts where the average film rental is less than $100. Several pictures on the contract may be over $100 each, or a different contract may average over $100, but the 20% option to cancel will apply just the same. He estimated that at least 10,000 theatres will secure this outright cancellation of 20% on all their contracts.

"Similarly," he continued, "distributors will provide a 15 per cent cancellation on contracts that average between $100 and $250, which includes about 4,000 of the remaining theatres, and a 10 per cent option to cancel if the average price is over $250.

"Many of the theatres whose average film rental is over $250 per feature already bargain for and secure selective contracts with an option to cancel a larger percentage than 10 per cent, or are not in a position to cancel any pictures because of a tight competitive situation and the resulting shortage of product," according to Mr. Kuykendall.

However, he explained, the distributors intend to impose the following conditions, which may cause the exhibitor to forfeit his option to cancel if they are not complied with:

"1. That the exhibitor must license all the feature pictures offered at the same time by the distributor, with certain exceptions, i.e., pictures produced abroad, unless made on location by an American company; pictures commonly known as Westerns; and re-issues.

"2. Written notice of cancellation must be given within a specified number of days after the notice of availability is sent.

"3. The exhibitor shall not be substantially in default on playing of pictures on the distributor's contracts.

Further Option Granted

Mr. Kuykendall said the distributors are willing to permit an additional option to cancel for any pictures which may be locally offensive on moral, religious or racial grounds, "if proper notice is given of the desire to cancel and the local board agrees that the picture is locally offensive in fact to the particular community."

The cancellation privileges are described by the MPTOA president as essentially making all contracts selective—"they do not prevent any exhibitor from bargaining for a larger option to cancel."

"With respect to each separate picture released," he continued, "the option may be exercised by the exhibitor after the picture is fully completed and prints are available for screening, after the picture has been publicly shown in the first runs, after the picture has been reviewed in the trade press and local newspapers and complete information is available to the exhibitor as to just what the picture is."

Mr. Kuykendall reported that elimination of the score charge will commence with 1939-40 product, and that for the rest of this season (1938-39), both on existing contracts and on new contracts, the distributors propose to bill the score charge and film rental as one item on flat rental pictures.

He admitted that nothing definite was promised by the distributors in connection with the proposal for a simplified, shorter standard form of exhibition contract for optional use by exhibitors, adding that because of "difficulties and obstacles, both practical and legal," it may be necessary to defer the development of such a contract "for the time being." The MPTOA chief said this was "one of the problems that can be taken up later or separately."

With Allied States said to be firmly in favor of arbitration boards and the MPTOA holding as strongly for conciliation boards, Mr. Kuykendall admitted that arbitration has many advantages over conciliation, but pointed out, "It takes a written agreement binding on all parties involved in the dispute to clothe an arbitration board with jurisdiction and authority to hear and decide a complaint.

HIGH COURT TO DECIDE 'DIVORCE' LAW APPEAL; MAY AFFECT U. S. ACTION

Supreme Bench Says It Has "Probable Jurisdiction" in Paramount Plea to Review North Dakota Decision

The United States supreme court in Washington Monday paved the way for a review of the North Dakota theatre divorcement law, enacted last year but not enforced pending this test, ruling that it had "probable jurisdiction" in the appeal of Paramount Pictures for review of a decision of a three-judge North Dakota Federal District Court holding the statute valid.

A decision by the supreme court on the law's legality could have far-reaching effect on the Government's anti-trust suit in New York against the large companies, inasmuch as the U. S. suit seeks, among other things, to divorce exhibition from distribution-production, as does the law in North Dakota.

Up March 27th

While the Department of Justice on Tuesday refused to speculate on the possible effect of a supreme court decision on the New York suit, and legal authorities for the majors in New York similarily refused comment, the last-named said that in all probability both the Department and the majors will have observers on hand when the supreme court takes up the divorcement case, on March 27th, with a view to determining its possible effect on the trust case.

One possibility of direct bearing is seen, if the supreme court, extending itself in interpreting the law, reasons that distributor-circuit operation is a monopolistic practice and is against the public interest, ruling that the North Dakota law, therefore, is valid. This, it is held, might encourage the Government in its suit, by recommending, inferentially, or otherwise, a recognition and curbing of that monopoly.

However, Paramount contends in its present appeal for review that the North Dakota act cannot be sustained as an anti-monopoly or unfair trade statute, because its prohibition is not confined to acts intended to destroy or injure competition, or to unfair trade practices; that there is no evidence to justify a finding that there is monopoly or even reasonable anticipation of monopoly in production or distribution, or any agreements, combinations or conspiracies among producers or distributors to restrain trade or competition or any policy adopted by them to favor affiliated houses as against independents.

The Department of Justice anti-trust suit charges that agreements and combinations do exist.

Two Sets of Legal Arguments

On the other hand, New York legal authorities hold that while the Government might be given "encouragement" by a supreme court decision upholding the North Dakota law, any supreme court reasoning that distributor-circuit operation is not monopolistic might, conversely, strengthen the position of the major defendants.

While admittedly embracing two different sets of legal arguments—one involving the right of a state to legislate, the other the Government's prosecution for alleged violation of trust laws, distributor spokesmen in New York believe that whatever—if any—effect is to be felt on the Government's suit by a supreme court decision will depend on the extent of the interpretation of the question by the court and the language it uses to interpret.

The U. S. District Court of North Dakota held that there was no evil proved in the ownership of theatres by producing and distributing firms but that the state had the right to legislate on the subject.

The next step in the North Dakota case will be the filing of briefs with the Supreme Court by the company and state counsel, disclosing the arguments which they will use, respectively, to attack and defend the constitutionality of the law.

The cases brought by Paramount name William Langer, as Governor of North Dakota, and Alvin C. Strutz, as state Attorney General, as respondents, and seek to restrain enforcement of the act, which prohibits operation of any motion picture theatre in which a producer or distributor has any interest whatever, on the ground that the law is unconstitutional in that it deprives the company of property without due process of law, denies it the equal protection of the laws and violates the copyright laws.

Sees Direct Burdens

In attacking the statute, Paramount, which was the first integrated film company to acquire houses in North Dakota, contends that if it is designed to regulate the licensing and distribution of films in that state it imposes direct burdens on interstate commerce and impairs rights protected by the U. S. copyright laws.

The company contends that the act goes far beyond the reasonable necessity of legislative regulation, in that it is designed to prevent operation of any theatre in which a producer or distributor has any interest, however small, and requires the disposition by producers of existing interests, regardless of their character and regardless of their relation to the actual control and operation of the theatre.

The result of the act, it is pointed out, will be to drive affiliated houses out of business and leave the field of exhibition to independent competitors, against the public interest and for the sole interest of a class seeking to exclude a powerful competitor; and that this exclusion has no relation to the prevention or correction of any evils which might reasonably be believed to exist, and is unreasonable, arbitrary, capricious and unjust in its drastic and unnecessary deprivation of property rights. And further, it is asserted, the means provided by the act to accomplish the policy declared by it have no reasonable relation to any proper public purpose with which the legislature was competent to deal, and are unnecessarily harsh and oppressive.

On the other hand, it is submitted, the law cannot be justified as a reasonable regulation of theatres in the interest of public safety, health or morals because any contention that it has any relation thereto is purely fanciful and the state has complete authority to enact laws which will fully protect the safety, health and morals of the theatregoing public without prohibiting the operation of theatres belonging to any particular class of exhibitors.

Finally, it is claimed, the practices of the producer-exhibitors which are complained of and which the act is intended to prevent, prohibit or correct, relate to competition in the distribution and licensing of films protected by copyright and shipped in interstate commerce, and are therefore subject to regulation only by the federal authorities.

Independent exhibitor interests, including Allied States, which were active in securing enactment of the North Dakota law and in its defense against the Paramount challenge, are awaiting the Supreme Court decision upon its constitutionality as a guide in plans for a national prohibition against producer-owned exhibition outlets by state and Congressional action.

Judge Thomas G. Thacher of the New York bar, member of the firm of Simpson, Thacher and Bartlett and former Solicitor General of the United States, will argue the case in the Supreme Court for all the majors.

MAJORS TO BE HEARD ON BLOCK BOOKING

Public hearings on the pending block booking bills in Congress were assured this week by a decision of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee to hold hearings on the Neely bill.

Action of the committee was based on requests from major companies for a hearing before any action was taken on the Neely measure, which last session was passed by the Senate after having been reported favorably on the basis of hearings held in 1936. Date for the hearings will be fixed later.

It is understood that in asking for new hearings the major companies felt that since the question of block booking is now in the courts, as part of the pending New York suit, legislative action should be held up until the issue therein presented is settled. It is also contended that the trade practice program now being worked out will deal with the question.

Independent exhibitor interests, on the other hand, including Allied States, are pressing for action on the Neely bill at this time in the belief that the very fact that the Government is attacking block booking in the courts will prove a potent argument in favor of Congressional action.

Allied to Continue With Chicago Suit

Jack Kirsch, leader of Allied Theatres of Illinois, this week denied that independent exhibitors would withdraw their suit against Balaban and Katz and the large distributing companies, who are charged with coercive practices. Mr. Kirsch pointed out that money had been raised for attorney's fees.

In last week's development of the suit, in Chicago, Robert Golding, one of the defense attorneys, declared the whole suit "a waste of time" and said he would seek dismissal.

Federal Judge Igoe granted a motion by the plaintiffs to take depositions before trial of B. & K. officials and the major company exchange managers.

Judge Igoe also postponed until February 10th a hearing of the suit by the Adelphi Theatre Corporation against Paramount.

FILM LOUIS-LEWIS FIGHT FILM WITHOUT A FIGHT

Paramount News Records All but Blows, in Protest Against Interstate Shipment Ban

Paramount News obtained authorization to make ringside pictures of last week's Joe Louis-John Henry Lewis heavyweight championship Negro prizefight—first newsreel to film a professional prizefight in eight years—but, instead, recorded only a narrator's description of the action, showing no actual blows, embellishing the narration with some "scenery" shots of the Madison Square Garden arena and others showing the defeated John Henry sprawled upon the canvas.

Explanation of this unique film treatment of a prizefight without any prizefighting was made in the film itself for the edification, if not delight, of the public, by Bill Slater, Paramount News sports narrator. As the fight was about to begin, Mr. Slater stepped before the camera and declared: "Now, I'm sorry, but the federal law prohibits us from showing professional fight pictures throughout the United States—but there's nothing to prevent me from telling you exactly what I saw at the ringside in those two minutes, 29 seconds of fighting." He then described the blows and the three knockdowns.

To Acquaint the Public

Behind this treatment, first of its kind ever undertaken with a promoter's authorization by a regular newsreel, is a plan to acquaint the public with what the newsreels call the "ridiculousness" of the anti-fight film law, which has been on the federal statute books for more than two decades. The idea is that perhaps support of the public can be enlisted to accomplish repeal of the law, a proposal now before Congress, as it has been year in and out for two decades.

The law has been flagrantly violated for years after each big prizefight, but the violators are not "regular" film producers or distributors, or newsreels. Fight-film "independents," on the fringe of the industry, or elsewhere, manage to get the pictures across state borders—which is the specific prohibition of the law—and when persons then are caught in possession of prints, a stay of sentence on an injunction usually follows for ten days, or long enough to "clean up" in a hurry within that state. A fine of $1,000 for violation eventually is paid—hardly ever are there jail sentences—the fine representing a small part of the local profits.

The "independent" fight-film distributors pay as much as $50,000 for the rights to film a popular bout, but their grosses may run as high as $800,000 (Schmeling-Louis). Paramount paid nothing to get its cameramen inside Madison Square Garden for the Louis-Lewis fistic battle, permitted with the thought of enlisting public support for repeal of the existing anti-fight film law.

Filming Not Prohibited

The law does not prohibit the filming and inter-state transportation of blows given in amateur bouts. Nor does it prohibit the filming of blows in professional bouts. Paramount would have been entirely within its rights in filming last week's fight and selling those films to any and all exhibitors within New York State. But, because the law does forbid transportation of professional fighting pictures from any one state to another, the company decided against filming for New York because it feared that some exhibitor, rightfully in possession of a print for his New York theatre, might "bicycle" the print across the border, into New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Connecticut or Vermont.

If this happened, Paramount might be liable for violation of the law, and so the corporation felt it could not jeopardize its position—particularly with the Department of Justice interest in the business being what it is. Not that the company ever had any intentions of violating the fight-film law, of course.

The present federal law was enacted after Jack Johnson, Negro-champion, defeated several white opponents, Congress voting quickly to avoid any possible trouble in theatres or elsewhere in the South as a result of screenings.

Since then, all-white fight films taken illegally across state lines, have brought enormous profits to the fight promoters selling the rights and to those buying them.

However, in the case of the all-Negro Louis-Lewis pictures, Mike Jacobs, the promoter, granted permission to the newsreel to set up cameras at the ringside.

Cooperates in Sound Recording

Newsreels, acting without invitation and wholly unauthorized, occasionally managed to get shots of big fights, years ago, much to the consternation of those who were sharing in the profits of the "authorized" filming. The newsreels simply purchased large blocks of tickets, filled them with newsreel workers and among them placed a cameraman with a small Eyemo camera. Even those films did not show actual blows. All such participation ceased about 1930.

Mike Jacobs further cooperated on this occasion by keeping all out-of-town sports editors away from Champion Joe Louis' dressing room after the fight to enable Paramount to get a first-hand, sound-recorded interview, without microphone interferences by the sports editors. Paramount thereby had time to meet its Wednesday night makeup "deadline" with those shots.

At first it was thought that Paramount News had got the "inside track" to the Louis-Lewis fight pictures because Stanton Griffis, chairman of Paramount's executive committee, is also chairman of the board of directors of Madison Square Garden. This, Paramount News denied, explaining that its own sports editor, Nat Wolensky, personally made the arrangements with Jacobs.

Broadway has been speculating for weeks on the possible position of Paramount and its newly acquired DuMont television company at Madison Square Garden, when DuMont is ready to telecast Garden sports events, in all probability at a price to a sponsor.

George Burns Fined $8,000 for Smuggling

George Burns, radio and motion picture player, was fined $8,000 and given a suspended sentence and probation for a year and a day on his plea of guilty to two indictments charging him with smuggling. The decision was handed down Tuesday in New York by Federal Judge William Bondy.

Johnston Honored in Hollywood

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, was honored last Saturday at the Lakeside Golf Club, in North Hollywood, by a dinner dance. Occasion was Mr. Johnston's celebration of his Silver Jubilee in the motion picture industry.

Bill Slater, sports narrator of Paramount News, directs Joe Louis in a firsthand, sound-recorded interview from the champion's dressing room in Madison Square Garden.
